

OVID'S METAMORPHOSES

A Reader for Students in Elementary College Latin

CHRISTINE L. ALBRIGHT

Ovid's Metamorphoses

Ovid's Metamorphoses is a Latin reader designed to partner existing elementary Latin textbooks.

The book features thirty compelling stories, graduated in difficulty and adapted from Ovid's epic Metamorphoses into prose. The original poem contains many different stories united thematically by the transformation which occurs in all of them; the epic features romance, seduction, humour, violence, monsters, and misbehaving gods.

Each chapter contains:

- a Latin passage adapted from the epic
- an accompanying vocabulary list
- a short commentary to help with translation
- a concise review of the specific grammar covered
- a brief comment on a literary aspect of the poem, or featured myth.

Suitable for college students studying Latin at the elementary level, Ovid's Metamorphoses is designed to be used alongside elementary Latin textbooks. Preserving Ovid's language and highly vivid descriptions, this reader introduces students to the epic masterpiece, allows them to consolidate their understanding of Latin prose, and offers opportunities for literary discussion.

Acknowledgements

Many people have assisted with the production of this reader, and I am indebted to each one of them. I thank my colleagues in the Department of Classics at the University of Georgia, including especially Thomas Biggs, Keith Dix, Erika Hermanowicz, Naomi Norman, and Peter O'Connell. John Nicholson and Charles Platter read drafts of stories and offered excellent suggestions and very helpful advice. I am grateful to both of them for their input. I also owe much to my anonymous reviewers, whose comments resulted in a very-much-improved reader. Any mistakes which remain are of course my own. I should thank several graduate research assistants who have helped with the project, including Silvio Curtis, Alex Karsten, and Aaron Ivey. Kelly Dugan, with her endless energy and meticulous organizational and editing skills, made enormous contributions to the project in its final stages. Carrie Cabe and Lori Gibbons of the University of Georgia's Information Technology team helped with many technical matters. I would like to thank my parents, George and Carol Albright, for their support and for the many hours they have spent entertaining my young son so I could work. Finally, I would like to thank the students in my elementary Latin classes at the University of Georgia, for whom I undertook this project in the first place.

Introduction

Publius Ovidius Naso, commonly known as Ovid, was born on March 20, 43 BCE at Sulmo, a town located about 100 miles east of Rome. He was born to a family of equestrian rank, and he received an excellent education which was meant to prepare him for a legal career. Although he did hold some minor public offices, Ovid instead felt compelled to write poetry. In Tristia 4.10.17–26, Ovid recalls his early devotion to poetry:

frater ad eloquium viridi tendebat ab aevo, fortia verbosi natus ad arma fori;
at mihi iam puero caelestia sacra placebant,
inque suum furtim Musa trahebat opus.
saepe pater dixit “studium quid inutile temptas?
Maeonides nullas ipse reliquit opes.”
motus eram dictis, totoque Helicone relicto scribere temptabam verba soluta modis.
sponte sua carmen numeros veniebat ad aptos,
et quod temptabam scribere versus erat.

My brother tended towards oratory from a young age; he was born for the strong weapons of the wordy forum. But for me already as a boy heavenly worship was pleasing, and the Muse stealthily was drawing me into her work. Often my father said: “Why do you attempt a useless pursuit? Homer himself left no wealth.” I was moved by his words, and, with Helicon altogether left behind, I tried to write words freed from meter. Of its own accord, song came to fitting numbers, and whatever I tried to write was verse.

Ovid enjoyed poetic success as a young man and eventually published many works in elegiac meter, including Amores (love poems), Heroides (letters from heroines to heroes), Medicamina Faciei Femineae (a poem about cosmetics), Ars Amatoria (a didactic poem about erotic pursuits), Remedia Amoris (a poem about how to disentangle oneself from relationships), Fasti (a poem about the Roman calendar), Tristia (poems written from exile), Epistulae ex Ponto (letters written from exile), and Ibis (a curse-poem).

In 8 CE, at the height of his career, Ovid was exiled to Tomis on the Black Sea by the emperor Augustus. His sentence was relegatio, which meant that he was banished from Rome but allowed to keep his property and citizenship. The exact cause for the punishment is not known, although in his later poetry Ovid himself tells his audience that his banishment was due to a carmen (poem) and an error (mistake). It is generally assumed that the carmen was the Ars Amatoria, although it had been published almost a decade before Ovid’s relegation.

The Metamorphoses, which was almost finished in the year Ovid's sentence was passed down, seems just as likely to have offended Augustus.

The Metamorphoses is Ovid's only surviving work in dactylic hexameter, the meter of Greek and Roman epic. It is organized in 15 books, and it contains a multitude of mythological stories from various cultures. The poem begins with a description of the creation of the universe and ends with a celebration of the political order of Rome under Augustus, so in general there is some sense of linear progression through the course of the text. The structure is quite complicated, however. Ovid embeds stories within other stories, allows stories to bleed from one book into the next, and uses multiple internal narrators. Transformation serves as a unifying theme, and Ovid's characters change into animals, birds, watery springs, constellations, and plants, for example.

This reader offers 30 stories which have been adapted from Ovid's verse into Latin prose. The reader is intended to complement elementary Latin textbooks and aims to help bridge the often wide gap between the elementary and intermediate reading levels by providing compelling, challenging passages. The reader has been designed as a supplementary text; ideally, students will attempt these stories after translating simpler passages in a primary textbook. The stories are graduated in difficulty and introduce grammatical topics typically covered during the first year of studying college Latin. In general, the length of the stories increases as the reader progresses, although a few shorter examples are found in the middle chapters which reflect the concise nature of Ovid's own narratives. As they work their way through the reader, students will encounter elements of Latin which tend to be difficult to negotiate when they first begin to read actual texts, such as relative pronouns which begin sentences, epithets, and plural words used when singular words are expected. The stories feature much of Ovid's own vocabulary and syntax.

The reader also aims to introduce students to Ovid's epic masterpiece. Thus, Ovid's poetic language and highly vivid descriptions have been preserved wherever possible. His graphic presentation of the mythical material has been retained. Sexual situations and raw violence are pervasive in the epic, and the content of Ovid's stories has not been sanitized. Most of the stories in the reader appear in the first half of the epic, but the last five stories are taken from Books 14 and 15. Like the epic itself, the reader begins with the story of creation and ends with the story of the apotheosis of Julius Caesar. Thus, if read from beginning to end, the reader will provide a sense of the structure and linear progression of the Metamorphoses and offer opportunities for robust literary discussion.

Each chapter includes a Latin passage adapted from the epic, an accompanying vocabulary list, a short commentary to help with translation, a concise review of the specific grammar covered, and a comment about a literary aspect of the poem or the featured myth. Students should note that vocabulary words are glossed the first time they appear but are not glossed in subsequent chapters. Some commonly used words such as nōn and sed appear only in the final glossary. Participles are glossed as adjectives until Chapter 18, when participles are introduced. After Chapter 18, vocabulary lists include the verbs from which participles are derived. Comparative and superlative adjectives and adverbs appear in vocabulary lists and the final glossary in their comparative or superlative forms.

1 Creation begins

(Met. 1.5–150)

At the beginning of Book 1, Ovid offers an account of creation. He calls this primordial state “Chaos,” borrowing the term from the Greek poet Hesiod.

1       Ante terrās et aquās, nātūra est ūna sphaera. Sphaera nōn ordināta est. Massa
2       indīgesta est. Nōn sunt stellae. Nōn est lūna. Terra, aqua, et aura sunt, sed terrae, 3       aqua, et aure sine formā sunt. Nōn sunt silvae. Nōn sunt āreae. Nōn sunt bestiae.
4       Nōn sunt casae. Nōn sunt undae. Nōn ripae sunt. Nōn piscīnae sunt. Nōn nāviculae
5       sunt. Nōn Eurus, Zephyrus, Boreās vel Auster. Nōn sunt muscae. Chaos est. Nihil
6       suam formam servat. Aliud aliīs obstat. Tum aliquis inordinātam māteriam ordinat.

Commentary

4 *Nōn sunt undae. Nōn ripae sunt: Notice that the subject of the sentence can appear in various positions with respect to the verb. That they are in the nominative case indicates that undae and ripae are the subjects of these sentences.

5 *Nōn Eurus, Zephyrus, Boreās vel Auster: The names of the winds are all in the nominative case.

5–6 *Nihil suam formam servat: The Latin word suus, a, um is a reflexive adjective, which means that it reflects back to the subject of the sentence and takes its meaning from that. Thus, it can mean his own, her own, its own, or their own. Like any adjective, it agrees with the noun it modifies in case, number, and gender, but you must determine what the subject is to translate it correctly. Here, the subject is nihil, so it should be translated its own.

Ovid introduces his epic with a short statement about his poetic agenda. He says: “My mind compels me to tell of forms changed into new bodies. Gods (for you all also have changed those forms), breathe favorably upon my beginnings and draw out an everlasting song which runs from the first origin of the universe to my own time.” The opening statement thus highlights the theme of the epic: transformation. Change occurs within each story included in the poem, and the opening account of creation, in which an ordered universe develops from a state of chaos, certainly is in keeping with Ovid’s stated theme. If read from beginning to end, the entire epic may be interpreted as a political cosmogony which celebrates the grand political metamorphosis of Rome under Augustus.

2 Creation continues

(Met. 1.5–150)

Ovid continues his account of creation by describing how one god brings order to the universe by arranging things in their proper place. Various living things occupy their respective habitats, and man is born.

Commentary

5–6 Virgō, Capricornus, Aquārius, Piscēs, Leō, Ariēs, Geminī, Taurus, Lībra, Sagittārius, Cancer, et Scorpīo sunt: You will no doubt recognize these signs of the zodiac. In Latin, the names mean The Virgin, The Goat, The Water Carrier, The Fish, The Lion, The Ram, The Twins, The Bull, The Scales, The Archer, The Crab, and The Scorpion. You will see these signs again in the story of Phaethon, where they are represented both on a work of art and as giant forms in the sky.

9–10 Terra ipsa multa sine rastro dat: The word ipse, ipsa, ipsum is an intensive pronoun or adjective which is used to add emphasis or to focus attention on a word, so its meaning depends on what it is intensifying. Here, it agrees with terra, so it should be translated itself. Ovid means here that the land produces food easily without agriculture.

10 Flāvum mel stillat: mel, mellis n. is a noun of the third declension and is in the nominative.

14 Virī dīs nōn sacrificant: dīs is dative plural of deus.

Ovid presents the creation of the universe in terms of an artist fashioning a work of art, although he is vague about which god serves as the cosmic fabricator. An obvious choice would be Vulcan, who is a craftsman-god. Art and artists figure prominently throughout Ovid's Metamorphoses. In fact, some scholars believe that, by focusing on the fates of so many mythological artists in the poem (many of whom suffer unpleasant outcomes), Ovid is making a statement about the role of artists in Augustan Age Rome.

3 Lycaon

(Met. 1.163–252)

At a meeting of the gods, Jupiter tells the story of how he punished impious Lycaon, king of Arcadia.

1 Iuppiter, plēnus īrae, concilium deōrum vocat. Deī et deae ad magna tecta et
2 rēgiām Iovis volant, et in sellīs marmoreīs sedent. Iuppiter fābulam dīs narrat:
3 “Infāmia mē movet, et dē summō Olympō volō. Deus sub simulacrō hūmānō terrās
4 lustrō. Ad tecta inhospita tyrannī Arcadiī appropinquō, cum crepusculum tenebrās
5 portat. Signa deī dō, et vulgus mihi supplicat. Lycāōn, tyrannus Arcadius, pia vōta
6 inrīdet. Avet vērum: estne advena deus vel vir? Lycāōn experientiam excōgitat.
7 Lycāōn iugulum victimae hūmānae secat, et carnōsa in flammā torret. Tum,
8 tyrannus carnōsa quasi cēnam mihi dat. Iniūria īram meam auget. Animus meus mē

Commentary

3 Infāmia mē movet, et dē summō Olympō volō: The story Jupiter is telling has already happened, but he is using the present tense to make the story especially vivid for his audience.

3–4 Deus sub simulacrō hūmānō terrās lustrō: Deus agrees with the subject of lustrō, which is first person singular. Translate: I, a god, traverse the lands under a human image.

4 Ad tecta inhospita: Latin often uses a plural noun when a singular idea is intended.

Lycaon, whose name probably comes from the Greek word for wolf, is sometimes considered to be the first werewolf. Ovid follows the tradition that Lycaon offended the gods by serving human flesh to them, but other sources report that the king of Arcadia sacrificed a human infant to Zeus Lycaeus. In the Republic, Plato alludes to men becoming wolves—a transformation known as lycanthropy—after eating human flesh at a human sacrifice on Mt. Lycaeum in Arcadia. The ancient Greek geographer Pausanias says that these men would return to human form after nine years, provided that they abstained from eating human flesh.

4 Deucalion and Pyrrha

(Met. 1.313–415)

One man and one woman, both pious and good, are saved from the flood by Jupiter and must repopulate the land.

2 mōns Parmāsus. Deucaliōn cum consorte in parvā rate nāvigat, et hūc appropinquat.
3 Prīmum nymphās et nūmina montis adōrant. Tunc Themin, deam fātidicam,
4 adōrant. Ibi dea ḍrāculum tenet. Deucaliōn bonus est, et Pyrrha, uxor eius, casta
5 est. Semper dīs supplicant. Iuppiter hominēs bonōs videt, et īra eius nōn manet.
6 Undae removent. Orbis terrārum redditus est. Deucaliōn dēsolātās terrās videt, et 7 uxōrem cum multīs lacrimīs appellat: “Ō fēmina, nōs duo turba sumus! Aqua 8 cētera possidet. Exempla hominum manēmus.” Duo flent. Tum, deae supplicant, et 9 vōta multa dant: “Themi, signa nōbīs dā! Quōmodo terrās sānāmus? Quōmodo

Commentary

3–4 *Tunc Themin … adōrant: Themin is a Greek accusative singular.

6 *Orbis terrārum redditus est: orbis terrārum means the world.

7 *Ō fēmina, nōs duo turba sumus: Think of this sentence as Ō fēmina, nōs duo sumus turba! Ō can remain untranslated. Ovid's use of turba is comic since there are only two humans left in the world.

8 *Exempla hominum manēmus: Exempla is in the nominative. Translate: We remain as examples of humans.

9 *Themi, signa nōbīs dā: Themi is in the vocative.

Ovid's description of a great flood resonates with accounts of floods in Genesis and in the Near Eastern Epic of Gilgamesh. The appearance of similar material in multiple texts is known as intertextuality. The story about Deucalion's and Pyrrha's recovery from the flood is particularly notable for its description of how people grow from the rocks which the two elderly people throw. The explicit comparison of the changing rocks to statues in the beginning stages of carving is reflective of the poet's general focus on art and artists in the poem, readily apparent earlier in the story of creation.

5 Apollo and Python

(Met. 1.416–451)

Apollo, the god of music and poetry, athletics, and prophecy, slays the monstrous serpent Python and establishes athletic games to commemorate his victory.

Commentary

1–2 *Antīquus ūmor igne sōlis percalescit: When the waters of the great flood start to subside, the moisture held in the soil heats up and causes the seeds of various forms of life to grow. igne is an ablative of means. Translate: by means of the fire or with the fire.

4 *Partim terra figūrās antiquās dat: These are the species which existed before the great flood.

4–5 *Terra quoque tē, maxime Pýthōn, creat: Ovid varies his narrative style by addressing the Python directly.

6 *Tantum spatiī dē monte tenet: The word tantus, a, um is used here as a neuter substantive, and it governs the genitive spatiī. Thus, the phrase is translated such a great space. The Python covers a large expanse of land on Mt. Parnassus.

10–11 *In lūdīs, iuvenēs pugnīs, pedibus, et rotā certant: The words pugnīs, pedibus, and rotā are ablatives of means and indicate boxing matches, foot races, and chariot races.

The Homeric Hymn to Apollo, which may date to as early as the eighth century BCE, tells the story of Apollo’s birth on Delos and subsequent founding of his sanctuary at Delphi. In that Greek poem, Hera entrusts the monster Typhaon to the care of a she-serpent, but Apollo slays the giant snake and leaves the corpse to rot in the sun. Thus, the Python takes its name from the Greek verb “pythein,” meaning “to rot.” Delphi itself was also called Pytho, and the panhellenic games held there in honor of Apollo were called the Pythian Games. The laurel tree was sacred to Apollo, so victors at these games received crowns of laurel leaves as prizes. Ovid goes on to explain how the laurel becomes sacred to Apollo in the next story.

6 Apollo and Daphne

(Met. 1.452–567)

Ovid describes Apollo's first experience with erotic pursuit in wonderful comic detail. Here, he loses Daphne but gains a sacred tree.

1 Prīmus amor Phoebī erat Daphnē Pēnēia. Daphnē formam bellam habēbat. Dēlius
2 Cupīdinem cum sagittis vidēbat, et Apollō glōriōsus deum amōris dērīdēbat. “Quid

4 mortuus, et factum est meum. Ego sōlus vincere tanta monstra possum. Irritāre
5 tantum amōrēs dēbēs.” Cupidō plēnus īrae saevae est. Deus amōris dicit: “Sagitta 6 tua cētera fīgere potest, sed sagitta mea tē fīgere potest!”

7 Cupidō duo tēla ē pharetrā prōmit. Sagitta aurea amōrem facit; tēlum plumbeum

13 videt, et nōn satis vidēre osculum. Cupit bāsiāre nympham. Deus digitōs et lacertōs 14 nūdōs laudat. Daphnē, territa, currit.

Commentary

1 *Prīmus amor ... Daphnē: Daphnē is a Greek name meaning laurel. The genitive is Daphnēs, and the accusative is Daphnēn.

2–3 *Quid tibi est ... lūdere cum armīs: Apollo's question is an expression in which a dative of reference is used with the interrogative word quid to mean what use is it for you?

10–12 *Utque stipulae conflagrant ... sīc deus in flammās abit: Ovid uses the images of stalks of grain and hedges burning when a torch comes too close to capture the intensity of Apollo's urgent desire. The comparison is relatively common in Latin poetry. sub lūce means, literally, under the light but indicates at dawn.

12 *Sua ūrācula deum fallunt: Apollo is a god of prophecy. Here, he is so overcome with desire for Daphne that he cannot console himself in the way he might console someone visiting his oracle.

15 “Manē, nymphā!” Apollō inquit, “Tē amō! Nōn hostis sum. Nōn agricola, et hīc
16 horridus armenta nōn observō. Nōn sine fāmā sum! Deus poētārum et athlētārum 17 sum. Amor mihi causa studiī est.” Daphnē fugit et ḥorat: “Pater, opem fer!” Sine 18 morā, forma nymphae mūtat. Torpor membra occupat. Forma nymphae frondōsa 19 est, et bracchia in rāmōs crescent. Subitō Daphnē est laurea. Adhūc Apollō 20 nympham amat. Deus bāsia laureae dat, et laurea abhorret. Deus dicit: “Sī mea 21 puella esse nōn potes, dēbēs esse arbor mea.” Procul Cupīdō rīdet.

Commentary

15 *Nōn hostis sum: Apollo tries to convince Daphne that he is not a threat to her here, but later in the epic the god is portrayed as a rapist.

17 *Pater, opem fer: fer is an irregular second person singular imperative.

20–1 *Sī mea puella esse nōn potes: In English, the word order would be sī nōn potes esse mea puella.

Apollo was an important deity in Augustan Age Rome. After his victory over Mark Antony and Cleopatra at the Battle of Actium in 31 BCE, Augustus, then known as Octavian, embraced Apollo as a patron god. He built a temple to the god on the Palatine Hill which was connected to his own palace. Subsequently, many references to Apollo appeared in artistic images of the age. Augustus' doorposts were garlanded with the god's sacred laurel leaves as an honor, and this image was celebrated on coins from the period. Here, Apollo is depicted comically as he burns with lust for Daphne. He is also depicted as a potential rapist. Indeed, his role as a rapist is confirmed later in the epic on a tapestry which Arachne weaves featuring the exploits of male gods such as Jupiter, Apollo, Neptune, and Bacchus. One wonders how the emperor would have viewed Ovid's playful and even irreverent portrait of an amorous Apollo.

7 Phaethon

(Met. 2.1–400)

Phoebus' son by Clymene, Phaethon, visits his father for the first time and foolishly tries to drive the chariot of the Sun.

1 Phaethōn filius Phoebī est, sed puer numquam vidēre patrem potest. Phaethōn
2 mātrem rogat: “Quis meus pater est?” Clymenē, māter Phaethōntis, dīcit: “Per 3 iubar sōlis, nāte, ā Sōle satus es. Sī animus tē movet, pete vērum ā deō ipso!”
4 Phaethōn laetus ēmicat post verba mātris, et dīcit: “Ambulābō ad rēgiam Sōlis!”

5 Rēgia Sōlis erat alta sublimibus columnīs. Rēgia clāra aurō et pyrōpō erat. Ebur

 35 QUADRIGĀS PATERNĀS NŌN TENĒRE POTERAT, SED MAGNA 36 TEMPTĀBAT.

Commentary

19 *Agere quadrigās Sōlis est officium deōrum: The infinitive agere serves as the subject of the verb est. Because it is an infinitive, it also takes the object quadrigās.

22–3 *nōlī agere nimium equōs: nōlī plus an infinitive indicates a negative command. Translate: do not drive.

30–1 *Nēreus et Dōris et nātae sē in antrīs tepidīs cēlant: The word se in this sentence is a reflexive pronoun in the accusative case. Like the reflexive adjective suus, a, um, it derives its meaning from the subject. Here, since Nēreus et Dōris et nātae is the subject, translate: Nereus and Doris and their daughters conceal themselves in tepid caves.

Ovid offers a detailed description of the carved artwork which adorns the doors of the Sun-god's palace in this story. This kind of rhetorical description is known as ekphrasis, which in Greek means "a speaking out." The rhetorical device is a convention of epic poetry and is used by earlier poets such as Homer, Apollonius Rhodius, Catullus, and Vergil. Notice how Ovid's description of the images on the doors recalls his earlier description of creation, which also features lands, bodies of water, and the heavens. Thus, the ekphrasis here is a microcosm of the more detailed version of creation which he offers at the beginning of the epic. Notice also how Ovid vividly describes the vision of the Sun surrounded by his attendants, which Phaethon first sees when he enters the palace, as if it is a carefully arranged work of art. Ovid thus blurs the boundaries between the ekphrasis and the primary narrative, again revealing his interest in visual art.

8 Cadmus and the founding of Thebes

(Met. 3.1–137)

When Jupiter abducts Europa from Phoenicia, her father King Agenor tells his son Cadmus to find her. Cadmus is unsuccessful in finding his sister, who gives birth to King Minos on Crete, but he founds his own city in Boeotia. Thebes is where Oedipus will eventually rule as king.

Commentary

1 *Quando Eurōpa Crētam in tergō taurī nat: Crētam is an accusative of place to which. The accusative is used without a preposition with cities, small islands, domus, and rūs.

2 *Agēnōr exilium poenam addit: That is, Cadmus will suffer exile if he does not find his sister Europa. Understand exilium to be in apposition to poenam. Translate: Agenor adds exile as a punishment.

5 *Supplex ḍrāculum Phoebī consultit: The noun supplex here is in the nominative and stands in apposition to Cadmus, who is understood as the subject. Translate: As a suppliant, he consults the oracle.

6 *fac moenia urbīs: The word fac is an irregular second person singular present imperative of the verb facere.

9 *Iuvēna multās hōrās adambulat: multās hōrās is an example of an accusative of extent of time. Translate: for many hours.

 34 Cadmus quīnque virōs comitēs habet. Iam Thēbae stant.

Commentary

18–19 *Serpēns orbēs squāmōsōs in volūbilibus nexibus torquet: orbēs here means coils. Ovid's poetic language creates a vivid image of the snake's twisted body.

19 *Ērēctus in aurās levēs stat: The phrase in aurās levēs should be translated into the light breezes. Ovid suggests here that when the huge serpent raises its neck, it touches the upper air. Thus, it is very tall.

20–1 *Cadmī dentibus, orbibus longīs, et tābe fūnestā venēnī necat: The ablatives here are all ablatives of means.

29–30 *Vōx dīcit . . . virī tē spectābunt: The voice is divine and prophesies that Cadmus himself will become a snake, which is a transformation which occurs later in the epic.

34 *Cadmus quīnque virōs comitēs habet: The noun comitēs stands in apposition to the noun virōs and is best translated as companions. The five armed soldiers who remain after the battle become the founders of the noble families of Thebes and, together with Cadmus, establish the city.

The armed soldiers who spring from the planted teeth of the serpent are known as the Spartoi, which in Greek means “Sown Men,” and the five men who remain after the battle become the founders of the noble families of Thebes. Thus, the Thebans considered themselves autochthonous, or “sprung from the earth.” In myth, Athena gives some of the serpent’s teeth to King Aeëtes of Colchis. Later, the hero Jason fights the armed soldiers which grow from those teeth when he contends for the golden fleece.

9 Actaeon

(Met. 3.138–252)

The grandson of Cadmus, Actaeon, accidentally sees Diana naked while he is hunting, and the angry goddess punishes him by turning him into prey for his own hounds.

1 Erat mōns infectus caede ferārum variārum. Iuvenis vēnātor, Actaeōn nomine, cum
2 comitibus per lustra vagābat. Actaeōn clāmat: “Līna nostra et ferrum nostrum
3 crūōre ferārum madent. Vēnātus satis fortūnae habet. Cum Aurōra sē redūcet, opus
4 repētemus.” Comites labōrem intermittunt.

5 Erat vallis densa piceīs et cupressū acūtā. Sacra Diānae erat. In recessū extrēmō
6 antrum erat, labōrātū nullā arte. Ibi nātūra suō ingeniō artem simulābat. Fōns
7 perlūcidus ā dextrā sonābat. Hic dea fessa vēnātū ferārum perfundere virgineōs artūs
8 solēbat. Nunc dea tēlum pharetramque arcumque ūnī nymphārum trādit, et alia
9 nymphā pallam habet. Duea nymphae vincla pedibus dēmunt. Alia nymphārum 10 capillōs sparsōs in nōdum colligit, quamvīs capillī nymphae ipsīus solūtī erant.
11 Cēterae aquam dē urnīs capācībus fundunt.

12 Dum Diāna sē in stāgnō solitō lavat, nepōs Cadmī per nemus ignōtū passibus nōn
13 certīs errat, et in lūcum intrat. Simul atque antrum rōrāns fontibus intrat, nymphae 14 nūdae sua pectora percutiunt, et vīsū virī multum ululant. Clāmor antrum implet.
15 Nymphae Diānam circumfundunt, et deam corporibus suis tegunt. Dea tamen 16 omnēs superēminet. Vultus deae vīsae sine vestimentō rubens est, ut Aurōra est 17 purpurea in caelō.

Commentary

3 *Vēnātus satis fortūnae habet: The indeclinable word satis often takes a partitive genitive. Translate: enough luck. In other words, the men have enjoyed success in their hunting.

6–7 *Fōns perlūcidus ā dextrā sonābat: ā dextrā is best translated on the right.

12–13 *nepōs Cadmī . . . passibus nōn certīs errat: passibus is an ablative of means with errat.

18 Quamquam turba nymphārum suārum stūpat, dea in latus obliquum stat et ōs retrō
 19 flectit. Tunc aquās in vultum Actaeonis iactat, et capillōs iuvenis undā spargit.
 20 Diāna dīcit: “Nunc fābulam deae vīsae nūdae narrā, sī potes!”

21 Dea cornua cervī capitī Actaeonis dat, spatium collō dat, aurēs cacūminat, manūs 22 cum pedibus mūtat, bracchia cum crūribus mūtat, et corpus vellere maculōsō vēlat.
 23 Actaeōn territus fugit. Ubi vultum et cornua in undā videt, temptat dīcere: “Mē 24 miserum!” Cupit dīcere, sed nulla vōx est. Tantum mēns pristina manet. Quid 25 faciet? Repetetne domum, vel latēbit in silvīs?

26 Dum dubitat, canēs cervum vident. Actaeōn mūtātus fugit per loca solita, et canēs 27 post vestīgia currunt. Cupit clāmāre: “Sum Actaeōn; dominum vestrum 28 cognoscite!” Verba cupīdīnī verbōrum dēsunt. Undique canēs circumstant, et rostra 29 in corpus mergunt. Dominum sub imāgine falsā cervī dīlacerant. Īra deae 30 pharetrātae satiāta est.

Commentary

18 dea in latus obliquum stat: The goddess stands in a position turned away from Actaeon to shield herself but still looks back at him.

23 Ubi vultum et cornua in undā videt: Actaeon sees his reflection in the pool of water.

28 Verba cupīdīnī verbōrum dēsunt: The verb dēesse takes a dative of the thing failed here, which is the impulse to speak. Translate: Words fail the desire for words. That is, he wants to speak but cannot.

Actaeon is ripped apart by his own hunting dogs in this story, which resembles sparagmos, a ritual tearing apart of flesh associated with the worship of Dionysus/Bacchus. In an Orphic myth, Actaeon's cousin Dionysus is torn apart and eaten by the Titans. Zeus later eats the child-god's heart, which has been saved by Athena from the Titans. When Zeus impregnates Semele, Dionysus is reconstituted in Semele's womb and reborn as Dionysus Zagreus. Unlike Dionysus, Actaeon is mortal and thus does not recover from his dogs' attack.

10 Semele

(Met. 3.253–315)

When Semele, one of Cadmus' daughters, becomes pregnant by Jove, Juno disguises herself as Semele's nurse and tricks the young woman into destroying herself.

1      Quandō fāma mortis Actaeōnis aurēs Iūnōnis tangēbat, uxor Iovis gaudēbat.
2      Memoriam Eurōpae, sorōris Cadmī et amōris Iovis, in animō habēbat. Nunc fāma
3      nova deae dolēbat. Semelē, filia Cadmī, gravida dē sēmine Iovis magnī erat.
4      Dum linguam ad iurgium cum Iove solvit, sibi dīcit: “Quōmodo iurgia mē
5      iuvant? Semelē poenās dabit! Fīliam Cadmī perdam, sī mē tenēre sceptrum
6      gemmāns decet. Rēgīna caelī et coniunx et certē soror Iovis sum. At, putō, Semelē
7      furtō contenta est, et iniūria meī thalamī brevis est. Gravida tamen est, et ego māter
8      dē Iove esse cupiō. Ipsa māter dē rēge deōrum nōn sum! Nōn Sāturnia sum, nisi 9      ista fēmina in undās Stygiās penetrābit, mersa ab Iove ipso!”

10     Surgit, et sē nūbe fulvā circumfundit. Tunc venit ad tecta Semelēs. Ante nūbem 11     removet, anum simulat. Capillōs cānōs ad tempora pōnit, et cutem rūgīs sulcat.
12     Vōcem anīlem facit, et nunc nūtrix Semelēs est. Sermo multus est, et fēminae ad 13     nōmen Iovis veniunt. Iūnō suspīrat et dīcit: “Multī falsī sē deōs appellant et 14     intrāre thalamōs pudīcōs possunt. Nōn satis est habēre nōmen Iovem. Pignus 15     postulā. Quantus Iūnōnem amat, tantus tē amāre dēbet. Omnia insignia Iovis 16     postulā. Complexūs Iūnōnis postulā.”

Commentary

5 *Semelē poenās dabit: The idiom poenās dare means to pay the penalty.

5–6 *sī mē tenēre ... decet: The impersonal verb decet takes an accusative-infinitive construction. Translate: if it is fitting for me to hold ...

6–7 *Semelē furtō contenta est: The ablative is used here with contenta for the thing with which one is contented. Juno starts her internal dialogue by telling herself that Jupiter's affair with Semele is not that offensive, but she decides to punish the daughter of Cadmus when she considers how Semele is pregnant by Jupiter while she herself is not.

15 *Quantus Iūnōnem amat, tantus tē amāre dēbet: The words quantus and tantus work together in this sentence and agree with the subject Iuppiter. Translate: As great as he is when he loves Juno, in such greatness he ought to love you.

17 Iūnō tālibus verbīs animum fīliae Cadmī format. Ubi Iuppiter ad tecta Semelēs
 18 venit, Semelē Iovem mūnus rogat. Deus dīcit: “Ēlige! Iūro per Stygem.” Semelē
 19 laeta nimis gaudet et dīcit: “Quālem Sāturnia tē sentīre solet, ubi thalamum deae 20 intrās, tālem tē mihi dā!” Deus ingemit. Iūrāta revocāre nōn potest!

21 Iuppiter maestissimus aethera altum conscendit, et nūbēs, ventōs, fulmina, et 22 tonitrūs colligit. Tunc rēgiam Semelēs intrat. Corpus mortāle tolerāre vīrēs Iovis
 23 nōn potest. Corpus Semelēs ardet! Iuppiter infantem imperfectum ab uterō mātris
 24 ēripit, et (sī fāma est digna) infantem in femur insult. Deus māterna tempora
 25 complet, et posteā Bacchus nātus est. Furtim Īnō, soror mātris, infantem pīmīs
 26 cūnīs ēducat, et inde nymphae Nysaeae in antrō occulunt et lacte alunt.

Commentary

18 Semelē Iovem mūnus rogat: The verb rogāre takes an accusative object of the person asked and also an accusative object of the thing requested.

19–20 Quālem Sāturnia tē sentīre solet … tālem tē mihi dā!: The words quālem and tālem agree with the pronouns tē. Translate: As Sāturnia is accustomed to feel you … give me yourself in such form!

21 Iuppiter maestissimus aethera altum conscendit: aethera is accusative singular.

25–6 Furtim Īnō … pīmīs cūnīs ēducat: The phrase pīmīs cūnīs means in earliest childhood. Here, Ovid refers to the story of Dionysus' upbringing in Asia Minor. The god eventually returns to Thebes.

In this story, Semele burns up when Jupiter has intercourse with her as he would with Juno, but the fetus she is carrying is saved from the fire. The king of the gods sews the fetus into his own thigh, where it continues to gestate. Later, Bacchus is born from his father's thigh. In another story, the king of the gods swallows his first wife, Metis, to prevent her from giving birth to a son who will challenge his power. When he swallows her, Metis is pregnant with the goddess Athena, who eventually is born out of her father's head. These two myths demonstrate how the king of the gods manages to exhibit feminine procreative power while at the same time displaying traditional characteristics of masculinity.

11 Tiresias

(Met. 3.316–38)

Ovid tells a brief story of how Tiresias loses his sight when he offends Juno but gains the ability to see the future.

1      Ubi cūnae Bacchī tūtae erant, forte Iuppiter iocōs cum Iūnōne agēbat. Rex deōrum
2      uxōrī dīcit: “Ubi miscent, voluptās uxōrum, putō, maior quam voluptās
3      marītōrum est.” Illa negat. Rēgīna deōrum dīcit: “Marītī maiōrem voluptātem
4      capiunt quam uxōrēs.” Quaerere sententiam Tiresiae constituunt. “Tiresiās
5      utrōsque amōrēs noscit,” Iuppiter dīcit. Rex deōrum fābulam narrat:

6      “Tiresiās ictū baculī duo corpora serpentum magnōrum coeuntium in silvā viridī
7      violat. Mirabiliter hic corpus virile āmittit. Tiresiās fēmina est! Septem annōs
8      formam fēmineam habet. Octāvō annō, rursus eōsdem serpentēs videt, et dīcit:
9      ‘Quoniam, sī vōs feriō, mūtare in formam contrāriam potest, nunc quoque vōs
10     feriam.’ Dīcit haec verba, et anguēs percutit. Statim forma virilis et imāgō genetīva 11     revenit.”

12     Hic igitur arbiter in līte iocōsā deōrum erat. Tiresiās dicta Iovis firmat. Sāturnia 13     multum dolet. Illa nōn iustē dolet, et oculōs iūdicis damnat. Pater omnipotēns 14     Tiresiae miserescit. Cuiquam enim deō facere inritum factum alterius nōn licet.
15     Iuppiter prō oculīs illī scīre futūra dat. Sīc poenam honōre levat.

Commentary

2–3 *Ubi … maior quam voluptas maritorum est: The word quam follows the comparative adjective maior and means than.

9 *Quoniam … mutare in formam contrariam potest: potest is used here impersonally. Translate: Since … it is possible to change into the opposite form.

14 *Cuiquam enim deō facere inritum factum altius non licet: The impersonal verb licet takes a dative of the person given permission and an infinitive of what is granted. Translate: Indeed it is not allowed for any god to make invalid the deed of another god.

15 *Iuppiter pro oculis illi scire futura dat: The verb dat should be translated grants here, and the infinitive phrase scire futura is its object.

Tiresias appears in Greek literature as a figure known for his great wisdom and forethought. In Homer's Odyssey, Odysseus travels to the Underworld to seek Tiresias' advice. In tragedies such as Sophocles' Antigone and Euripides' Bacchae, Tiresias is a character who tries to deter the protagonists from their destructive behavior. In another Sophoclean tragedy, Oedipus the King, Tiresias' physical blindness draws attention to his remarkable inner vision. In that play, Oedipus ignores Tiresias' advice and ends up blinding himself upon realizing the horrible truth about his identity, highlighting the connection between vision and knowledge. The fact that Tiresias spends time both as a woman and as a man no doubt contributes to his great wisdom.

12 Bacchus and Pentheus

(Met. 3.511–733)

Pentheus, Cadmus' grandson, refuses to recognize that Semele's son Bacchus is divine and suffers horribly for the outrage.

1 Fāma Tiresiae per urbēs crēscēbat, et nōmen magnum erat. Penthēūs, nepōs Cadmī, 2 sōlus fāmam huius spērnēbat. Penthēūs, contemptor deōrum, verba praeſāga
3 rīdēbat et oculōs āmissōs senis dērīdēbat. Ille senex autem caput album mōvit et 4 dixit: “Erit deus novus; tempus nōn procul est. Līber, fīlius Semelēs, hūc veniet.
5 Nisi illum venerābis, māter tua et sorōrēs tē dīlacerābunt et tē in mille locīs
6 spargent. Silvās sanguine foedābis. Verba mea audīre dēbēs, et venerāre deōs
7 dēbēs.” Nātus ab Echīone tālia verba dērisit, sed verba vātis vēra erant.

8 Mox Līber adest, et agrī ululātibus fēstīs fremunt. Turba ruit, fēminaē cum virīs, 9 nōbilēs cum vulgō; omnēs ad sacra Bacchī currunt. Penthēūs īrātus clāmāvit: “Qui 10 furor, anguigenae, prōles Māvortia, vestrās mentēs attonuit? Puer inermis Thēbās 11 capiet! Aerane, tībia, fraudēs magicae, et vōcēs fēmineae vincere mīlitēs possunt?
12 Minimē!” Penthēūs mīlitēs iūssit: “Īte, sine morā ducem turbae ululantis hūc
13 attrahite.” Cadmus et alī hunc verbīs corripuērunt, et inhibēre hunc frūstrā 14 labōrāvērunt. Mīlitēs discessērunt.

Commentary

5 māter tua et sorōrēs tē dīlacerābunt: Cadmus has four daughters: Agave, Ino, Autonoë, and Semele. Semele is dead at this point.

8 Mox Liber adest, et agrī ululātibus fēstīs fremunt: Bacchus embodies an embracing of the “other” and freedom from rules. His worship thus included running in the wild, drinking, dancing, singing, and ululating loudly.

aes, aeris n.: bronze, something made of bronze, bronze cymbal
albus, a, um: white

laborō, laborāre, labōrāvī, labōratūm: to work at Liber, Liberī m.: Liber, an Italian deity associated with Bacchus magicus, a, um: relating to magic Māvortius, a, um: of Mars, having to do with Mars
mīles, mīlitis m.: soldier
minimē: (adv.) not at all mox: (adv.) soon
nōbilis, e: well-known
Pentheūs, ī m.: Pentheus, a grandson of Cadmus praesāgus, a, um: foreboding, predicting prōles, prōlis f.: offspring, descendants ruō, ruere, ruī, rutum: to rush senex, senis m.: old man
spernō, spernere, sprēvī, sprētum: to put away, reject, scorn, despise

ululātus, ūs f.: a howling, shrieking
vātes, vātis m. or f.: seer, prophet venerō, venerāre, venerāvī, venerātum: to worship, entreat

15 Mīlitēs cruentātī revēnērunt. Penthēūs rogāvit: “Ubi Bacchus est?” Mīlitēs:
 16 “Illum nōn vīdīmus. Hunc tamen, comitem eius famulumque sacrōrum, cēpimus.”
 17 Mīlitēs nōn sentiunt, sed famulus est Līber ipse. Penthēūs hunc oculīs spectāvit, et 18 īra magna fuit. Dixit: “Militēs, hunc rapite, corpus eius cruciāte, et in noctem 19 Stygiam dēmittite!” Penthēūs perstitit. Posteā, dum mīlitēs instrūmenta cruciātūs 20 parant, famulus catēnās āmīsit, iūtus ā nullō. Famulus discessit.

21 Nunc Penthēūs ipse ad Cithaerōnem vādit. Penthēūs famulum quaerit. Mōns 22 cantibus et vōce clārā Bacchārum sonābat. In monte ferē mediō campus pūrus erat, 23 spectābilis undique. In hōc locō Penthēūs ambulābat. In hōc locō Bacchae sacra
 24 etiam faciēbant. Hīc māter prīma illum, cernentem sacra oculīs profanīs, vīdit.
 25 Māter, dēmēns, clāmāvit: “Sorōrēs, maximus aper est! Errat in nostrīs agrīs. Illum 26 ferīre dēbeō!” Omnis turba furēns ruit, et Pentheum dīlacerant. Agāvē, māter 27 Penthei, ululat et caput scindit. Agāvē dīcit: “Iō comitēs, hoc opus est victōria 28 nostra!” Verba Tiresiae vera sunt. Nunc populus Thēbānus sacra nova frequentat, 29 et semper ārās Bacchī colit.

Commentary

18–19 et in noctem Stygiam dēmittite: Ovid uses poetic language here to tell the slaves to kill their captive, who is actually Bacchus himself.

19–20 *Posteā ... famulus catēnās āmīsit, iūtus ā nullō: Because Bacchus represents a freedom from societal confines, he resists being bound in chains.

24 *Hīc māter prīma illum, cernentem sacra oculīs profanīs, vīdit: The word cernentem agrees with illum. Pentheus accidentally sees the secret rituals of the followers of Bacchus.

Agāvē, Agāvēs f.: Agave, mother of Pentheus
āmissus, a, um: lost

In this story, the daughters of Cadmus run freely on the mountain, playing musical instruments and ululating. Pentheus is disturbed by their behavior, which is not at all in keeping with expectations for noble women. Bacchus is a god of intoxication and madness, and he embodies a freedom from the confines of societal rules. He often is attended by women and creatures such as satyrs, whose animalistic half resonates with the wild element of the god. When filled with his essence, his followers experience ekstasis, which is a Greek word meaning “a standing outside of oneself.” Cult activity for Bacchus included both sparagmos of animals and omophagia, which is the consumption of raw flesh.

13 Mars and Venus

(Met. 4.167–89)

When Venus has an affair with Mars, her husband Vulcan fashions a trap for the couple out of chains which are as fine as spiderwebs.

1 Sōl p̄imus adulterium Veneris et Martis vīdit. Hic deus p̄imus omnia videt. Ubi
2 Venerem cum Marte vīdit, factō indoluit. Sōl fūta torī et locum furtī marītō
3 Veneris, Vulcānō Iūnōnigenae, monstrāvit. Dixit: “Vulcāne, uxōrem tuam cum
4 Marte vīdī. Herī, ubi utrōsque vīdī, in torō tuō multas hōrās consumpserant.” Cor
5 Vulcānī excidit. Mēns Vulcānī excidit. Deus opus tenēbat, et quoque illud opus dē 6 dextrā excidit.

7 Deus dē arte eius cōgitāvit. Exemplō catēnās ex aere, rēte, laqueum ēlimāvit.
8 Hae catēnae gracilēs oculōs fallere poterant. Stāmina tenuissima illud opus
9 vincere nō poterant, nec arānea pendentia dē summō tignō. Deus sibi dixit: “Sī
10 Mars ad tecta et torum Veneris vēnerit, hae catēnae amantes inlaqueābunt! Tactus 11 levis et mōmentum parvum meās insidiās efficient.” Tunc catēnās lectō 12 circumdedit et laqueum collocāvit.

Commentary

1–2 *Ubi Venerem cum Marte vīdit, factō indoluit: The verb indolescere takes an ablative of the thing causing pain to the subject. Translate: He (Sōl) was pained by the deed.

3 *Vulcānō Iūnōnigenae: This is in apposition to marītō.

5 *Deus opus tenēbat: Vulcan is a craftsman-god, so he is engaged in his work when the Sun tells him about his wife's affair with Mars.

8–9 *Stāmina tenuissima illud opus vincere nō poterant . . . tignō: Ovid uses the verb vincere here to indicate that Vulcan's artistry is more delicate than the finest woven works and even spiderwebs.

11–12 *Tunc catēnās lectō circumdedit: The verb circumdare takes an accusative of the thing placed and a dative of the thing around which it is placed.

13 Ubi Venus et adulter Mars in ūnum torum vēnērunt, ambō multum mōvērunt.
14 Mōmentum laqueum effēcit, et Venus et Mārs, dēprensī arte marītī, in mediīs
15 amplexibus haesērunt. Exemplō Lemnius valvās eburnās patefēcit, et deōs 16 immīsit. Illī ligatī turpiter iacuērunt. Aliquis dē dis (nōn tristibus) dixit: “Optō sīc 17 turpis esse! Sī Venus mē ad thalamum vocāverit, illūc laetus ruam.” Superī 18 risērunt, et haec fābula nōtissima in tōtō caelō diū erat.

Commentary

14 Mōmentum laqueum effēcit: Mōmentum is the subject, and laqueum is the direct object.
14 et Venus et Mārs, dēprensī arte marītī: The ablative of means goes with the word dēprensī.
17–18 Superī risērunt, et haec fābula nōtissima in tōtō caelō diū erat: The word superī is used frequently to mean the gods. Ovid means that this story was very popular among the gods.

The story of the adulterous affair of Mars and Venus first appears in Homer's Odyssey. There, the blind bard Demodokos entertains everyone with the story at the court of the Phaiakians, where Odysseus has washed up after years of struggling to return home from the Trojan War. Homer compares the delicate chains, which the craftsman-god Hephaestus (Vulcan's Greek counterpart) creates, to spiderwebs, a comparison which makes its way into Ovid's story. The comparison has particular significance in Homer's poem. Later, when Odysseus returns to his homeland, Homer suggests that the marriage bed of Odysseus and Penelope might be full of spiderwebs. So, Odysseus is likened to Hephaestus, and the story of Hephaestus' triumph over his wife's lover by means of his art rather than by might foreshadows Odysseus' own victory over the suitors who have been pursuing Penelope in his absence. Indeed, Odysseus and Hephaestus share the Greek epithet poly-metis, which means "very resourceful."

14 Salmacis and Hermaphroditus

(Met. 4.274–388)

Ovid gives an account of how the spring of Salmacis gains the power to emasculate men who bathe in its waters.

1 Nāidēs puerum, nātūm Mercuriō et dīvā Venere, sub antrīs Īdaeīs ēnūtrīvērunt. In 2 faciē puerī mātrem et patrem cognoscere poterat, et puer nōmen, Hermaphrodītum,
3 ab illīs trāxit. Ubi tria quinquennia fēcit, montēs patriōs dēseruit et in locīs ignōtīs
4 errāvit. Ad Lyciās urbēs et Cāriam vēnit. Hīc stāgnū lymphae lūcentis usque ad
5 īnum solum vīdit. Salmacis, nymphā, stāgnū colēbat. Nec nymphā apta vēnātuī
6 erat, nec arcum flectere solēbat. Hōc diē flōrēs legēbat ubi puerum vīdit vīsumque 7 habēre optāvit.

8 Antequam puerum appellāvit, sē composuit. Amictūs circumspexit, et vultum
9 fīnxit. Tunc dixit: “Ō dignissime puer, speciēs tua similis deō est. Sīve deus es,
10 Cupīdō esse potes. Sīve mortālis es, frāter et pater tuus sunt beāti, et soror, māter, 11 et nūtrix sunt fortūnātae. Tibi nūbere cupiō.” Rubor ūra puerī notāvit. Cum nymphā 12 oscula poposcit, Hermaphrodītus dixit: “Nisi dēsinēs, hunc locum et tē 13 relinquam!” Salmacis puerō respondit: “Hunc locum tibi trādō.” Nymphā discēdere 14 simulāvit, et sē in fruticibus silvae cēlāvit.

In this story, Ovid offers an aetiological myth for hermaphroditism. In general, Greek and Roman society considered women to be threatening to men's masculinity. Women were thought to be cold and wet by nature and to need constant replenishment of the fluids lost through menstruation to stay healthy. One way to replenish these lost fluids was through sexual intercourse with men. Men were considered to be warm and dry by nature, and it was thought that losing too much masculine fluid through sex with women could cause men's bodies to become soft, their voices to get higher, and, overall, their strength to weaken. Here, the fountain assumes the emasculating power of the nymph herself.

15 The transformation of Cadmus

(Met. 4.563–603)

As prophesied, after the misfortunes of his family in Thebes, Cadmus himself becomes a serpent.

1      Cadmus, quī conditor Thēbānus fuerat, victus luctū fortūnāque malā et territus
2      ostentīs quae plūrima vīderat, ex urbe suā relīquit. Errōres longī Cadmum ēgunt.

Commentary

21–22 *Qui tunc in latebrās subeunt: The relative pronoun qui introduces this sentence. Its antecedent is dracōnēs in the previous sentence. It is not uncommon in Latin for sentences to begin with relative pronouns which refer to nouns and pronouns appearing earlier in the text.

22 *meminērunt vītae: Verbs of remembering and forgetting often take a genitive object.

23 *hominēs vulnere laedunt: Take hominēs as the object of laedunt.

RELATIVE CLAUSES

Relative clauses appear with great frequency in Latin, so it is important to understand how they work. Relative clauses allow one sentence to be subordinated to another. In the sentence Cadmus, quī conditor Thēbānus fuerat, victus luctū fortūnāque malā et territus ostentis quae plūrima vīderat, ex urbe suā relīquit, the sentence Cadmus conditor Thēbānus fuerat has been subordinated to and embedded within the sentence Cadmus victus luctū fortūnāque malā et territus ostentis quae plūrima vīderat ex urbe suā relīquit. The first sentence thus becomes a relative clause within the second sentence. Relative clauses are introduced by relative pronouns, which, like any pronouns, stand for nouns. A relative pronoun takes its gender and number from its antecedent, but its grammatical function in the relative clause determines its case. In the sentence Num sacer ille serpēns, quem cuspide meā trāiēcī et cuius dentēs vīpereōs per humum sparsī, erat?, the relative pronoun quem is masculine and singular because its antecedent is serpēns, and it is in the accusative case because it functions as the direct object of trāiēcī within the relative clause. The relative pronoun cuius is masculine and singular because it also refers to serpēns, but it is in the genitive case because it indicates possession within the relative clause. Translate: That was not a sacred serpent which I pierced with my spear and whose snaky teeth I scattered on the ground, was it?

The story of Cadmus turning into a snake occurs in Book 4 of Ovid's poem, but it refers back to the story about the foundation of Thebes in Book 3. There, Cadmus slays a serpent and, when instructed to do so by Minerva, sows the teeth of the serpent in the ground, from which armed men grow. In general, snakes are chthonic symbols and signify a close connection to the earth. Athens, like Thebes, had myths about its foundation which involved snakes. Cecrops, an early king of Athens, was thought to be sprung from the earth and to have a snake's form on the lower half of his body, and Erichthonius, another early figure, also was part serpent. The Athenians, like the Thebans, considered themselves to be autochthonous.

16 Perseus and Atlas

(Met. 4.604–62)

When Atlas refuses to extend hospitality to Perseus, a son of Jupiter by Danaë, Perseus turns the giant into a mountain using the freshly severed head of Medusa.

1 Postquam Medūsa ā Perseō, quem Danaē ā pluviō aurō concēperat, necāta erat,
2 spolium monstrij vīpereī ā victōre portābātur. Perseus āera tenerum ālīs strīdentibus
3 carpsit. Cum victor super harēnās Libycās pendēbat, guttae cruentae capitī
4 Gorgoneī ceciderunt, quās terra excēpit et in angues variōs animāvit, unde illa terra
5 est infesta serpentibus. Inde Perseus per immēnsum spatiū caelī ventīs
6 discordibus actus est, nunc hūc, nunc illūc, ut nūbēs aquōsae. Terrās despectat, et 7 tōtum orbem supervolat. Ter Arctōs gelidās, ter bracchia Cancrī vīdit. Iamque diēs
8 cadēbat, et, veritus sē noctī crēdere, in Hesperiā, regnō Atlantis, constituit. Hīc 9 requiēs ā victōre petīta est.

Commentary

1 *quem Danaē ā pluviō aurō concēperat: In myth, when Danaë is locked away in a bronze chamber, Zeus visits and impregnates her in the form of a golden shower. Perseus is the product of the encounter.

2–3 *Perseus āera tenerum ... carpsit: āera is accusative singular.

8 *veritus sē noctī crēdere: The word veritus, meaning fearful, fearing, takes an explanatory infinitive here. Translate: fearing to trust himself to the night.

10 Hic Atlās, fīlius Īapetī, praestāns cunctīs hominibus corpore ingentī fuit. Mille
 11 gregēs illī totidemque armenta per herbās errābant. Atlās arborem, cuius rāmī
 12 radiantēs aurō erant et cuius pōma aurea erant, habēbat. “Hospes,” Perseus illī 13 dixit, “Sī glōria magnī generis tē tangit (auctor generis mihi est Iuppiter), 14 hospitium requiemque petō.” Sed ille memor sortis vetustae erat, quam Themis 15 dederat: “Tempus, Atlās, veniet quō tua arbor aurō spoliābitur, et nātus Iove hunc 16 titulum praedae habēbit.” Atlās territus pōmārium moenibus clauserat, et omnēs 17 externōs ā suīs finibus serpente vastō arcēbat. Atlās Perseō dixit: “Vāde procul!
 18 Hospitium tibi nōn dabō!”

19 Perseus, īrātus, Atlantī dixit: “Accipe mūnus, quoniam mea grātia parvī tibi est!”
 20 Victor, versus retrō, faciem Medūsa porrexit. Subitō Atlās mōns factus est! Barba

In this story, Perseus turns Atlas into a mountain by holding out Medusa's severed head. The three Gorgons were called Sthenno, Euryale, and Medusa. They are often represented as hideous women with snakes for hair, large round eyes, protruding tongues, and wings. Their apotropaic, mask-like gaze has the power to turn men to stone, and thus their land features many statues of humans who made the mistake of looking at them. Medusa was the only mortal Gorgon, and, in myth, Perseus manages to avoid her lethal stare by using his shield to look at her reflection rather than directly at her. When Perseus kills Medusa, the hero Chrysaor and the winged horse Pegasus are born from her body.

17 Perseus and Andromeda

(Met. 4.663–803)

Perseus rescues the princess Andromeda from a sea-monster and tells guests at their wedding the story of how he conquered the Gorgon and how Medusa came to have snakes in her hair.

1      Ubi Perseus spolium memorabile monst̄i vīpereī portābat et āera tenerum
2      carpēbat, populōs Aethiopicōs et arva Cēphēa conspexit. Ibi Andromeda immerita
3      poenās mātris, quae deōs violāverat, dabat. Perseus vincula fēminam bellam ad

5      parentibus fēminaē dīxit sē Andromedam servātūrum esse. Dixit: “Sī mea nūpta
6      erit, Andromedam ē dentibus bēluae ēripiam!” Cassiopē et Cēpheus lēgem
7      accipiunt, et filiō Iovis regnum dōtāle prōmittunt. Tunc Perseus bēluam necat, et 8      Andromedam ā vinculis liberat.

9      Cassiopē et Cēpheus gaudent, et generum salūtant. Dīcunt Perseum servātōrem
10     domūs esse. Prōtinus Perseus Andromedam praemium factī magnī rapit. Hymēn 11     Amorque taedās praecutiunt. Odōrēs ignēs satiant, serta dē tectīs pendunt, et 12     ubīque lyra, tībia, et cantus sonant. Valvae reserātae sunt, et ātria aurea patent.
13     Procerēs Cēphēni rēgiam intrant, et convīvium magnum est.

 26 crīnēm Gorgoneum in hydrōs turpēs mūtāvit. Nunc quoque dea anguēs quōs fēcit 27 in aegide suā sustinet.”

Commentary

14 *sitim mūnere Bacchī satiāvērunt: sitim is accusative singular.

15 *Qui ēdocuit dixit: The relative clause qui ēdocuit serves as the subject of the verb dixit. The person who asks Perseus to share the story about his conquest of the Gorgon is the man who answers Perseus' questions about local customs and mentality.

17–18 *Perseus narrāvit . . . in silicem: conversa agrees with simulācra.

19–20 *Somnum gravem . . . ēripuisse: The indirect statement is dependent on the verb narrāvit in the previous sentence.

24 *rēctōrem ponū: This descriptive phrase refers to Neptune, the god governing salty waters and the sea.

INDIRECT STATEMENT

Indirect speech occurs when direct speech is reported by someone, as in the sentence He said that the sailor was large. The direct statement here would be the sailor is large, but it has been subordinated to the statement he said, thus turning it into indirect speech. Indirect statement occurs after verbs of speaking, thinking, perceiving, etc. and is constructed with an accusative subject plus an infinitive. In Latin, the sentence above would be Dixit nautam ingentem esse. Thus, the sentence Dicunt Perseum servatōrem domūs esse should be translated They say that Perseus is the savior of the household.

The overall structure of the Metamorphoses is complicated, and Ovid frequently embeds stories within other stories, thus creating multiple levels of narration. Here, Ovid has embedded the story about Perseus slaying Medusa within the story of Perseus and Andromeda. In the Western tradition, the epic convention of embedded narration dates back to Homer, who has Odysseus himself narrate several books of the Odyssey. In a poetic performance of his own, Odysseus describes to the Phaiakians his adventures since the Trojan War. Interestingly, Odysseus has a reputation for lying and thus may not be an entirely reliable narrator of his own exploits.

Commentary

1 *Haud procul Hennaeīs moenibus: The ablative follows the adverb procul. Translate: Scarcely far from Henna's walls.

8 *quod inclūsum cornibus angustīs coit: The sea is formed by the points of land which enclose it.

12 *equōsque terribilēs hortātus: The participle hortātus takes equosque terribilēs as its object.

17 Intereā Cerēs, petēns filiām, per multās terrās ad Cyanēn vēnit. Nympha deae 18 omnia quae vīderat dīcere nōn poterat, sed signa tamen manifesta dedit. Zōnam 19 Persephonēs in undīs ostendit, quam dea agnōvit. Nunc Cerēs filiam raptam esse 20 scīvit. Dīva capillōs inordinātōs laniāvit et pectus percussit. Arātra glaebās
 21 vertentia frēgit, et īrāta agricolās bovēsque lētō dedit. Fertilitās terrae dēficere
 22 incēpit. Deinde Arethūsa, nymphā fontis Sicelidis, deae dixit Prōserpinam nunc 23 rēgīnam tyrannī infernī esse. Māter stupuit.

24 Mox invidiōsa ante Iovem stat. Dea dīcit: “Supplex tibi vēnī, Iuppiter. Sī nulla
 25 grātia mātris est, fātum filiae movēre patrem dēbet. Tua filia digna marītō qui eam 26 rapuit nōn est.” Rēx deōrum respondet: “Hoc factum nōn est iniūria, sed amor. Dīs, 27 frāter meus, gener nōbīs pudendus nōn erit. Sed sī illic nullōs cibōs contigit, 28 Prōserpina caelum repetet.” Puella autem septem grāna pōmī pūnicē ēderat. At 29 Iuppiter, medius frātris sorōrisque maestae, annum volventem aequē dīvidit. Nunc 30 dea, nūmen commūne duōrum regnōrum, cum mātre totidem mensēs, cum coniuge 31 totidem mensēs est.

Commentary

21 īrāta agricolās bovēsque lētō dedit: Translated literally, this sentence means angry, she gave farmers and cows to ruin. In other words, Ceres causes the earth and its creatures to become infertile.

24–5 Sī nulla grātia mātris est, fātum filiae movēre patrem dēbet: Ceres means that if her own indignation about her daughter's rape does not move Jupiter, his own concern should move him. Proserpina is Jupiter's daughter by Ceres.

25–6 Tua filia digna marītō qui eam rapuit nōn est: Approach this sentence as if it reads Tua filia nōn est digna marītō qui eam rapuit.

30–1 totidem mēnsēs . . . totidem mensēs est: The accusatives indicate extent of time.

aequē: (adv.) equally

arātrum, ī n.: plow

Arethūsa, ae f.: Arethusa, a Sicilian nymph
cibus, ī m.: food

commūnis, e: that which is shared, common contingō, contingere, contigī, contactum: to touch, affect

dēficiō, dēficere, dēfecī, dēfectum: to fail, run short, become weak

dīversus, a, um: separate, different, opposed dīvidō, dīvidere, dīvisī, divīsum: to divide

ēdō, ēdere, ēdī, ēsum: to eat

fertilitās, fertilitātis f.: fruitfulness, fertility frangō, frangere, frēgī, fractum: to break, break into pieces

grānum, ī n.: grain, seed

illīc: (adv.) there, in that place

infernus, a, um: lower, from below

invidiōsus, a, um: envious, hateful, hostile

laniō, laniāre, laniāvī, laniātum: to tear to pieces

lētum, ī n.: death, ruin

maestus, a, um: sad, dejected

manifestus, a, um: clear, visible

ostendō, ostendere, ostendī, ostentum:
to show, hold out, display

pudendus, a, um: deserving of shame, shameful

pūniceus, a, um: red, purple

volvō, volvere, volvī, volūtum: to roll, twist, turn round

PARTICIPLES

Participles are adjectives which derive from verbs, so they possess both verbal and adjectival elements. Like any adjectives, they have masculine, feminine, and neuter forms. While they function grammatically as adjectives within a sentence, their verbal essence can govern objects, introduce indirect statement, and introduce subjunctive clauses, for example. There are four participles in Latin. The present active participle is declined as a third declension adjective while the other participles are declined as first-second declension adjectives.

Ovid's account of the rape of Proserpina is actually narrated by Calliope, the Muse of epic poetry, as part of a musical contest. With her excellent tale sung on behalf of the Muses, Calliope wins the competition against the Pierides, who are punished by being turned into magpies for foolishly thinking that they could sing better than the Muses. Minerva listens to the account of the contest in Book 5 and is inspired by the Muses' victory. At the beginning of the next book, the goddess of weaving turns her mind to Arachne, a famous weaver who has refused in her artistry to yield to Minerva. Minerva and Arachne then engage in their own competition. The connection between the two narratives further demonstrates the complexity of the structure of Ovid's poem.

19 Arachne and Minerva

(Met. 6.1–145)

When Arachne does not properly acknowledge Minerva's preeminence as an artist, the goddess contends with the mortal weaver.

1 Fābulā dē Prōserpinā narrātā, Minerva carmina Mūsārum probāvit. Tum sēcum
2 dixit: “laudāre est parum; dēbeō laudārī et nōn sinere meum nūmen spērnī sine
3 poenā.” Animum fātīs Maeoniae Arachnēs intendit, quam sibi nōn cēdere
4 laudibus artis lānificae audīverat. Nōn sōlum vestēs factās, sed quoque illam
5 labōrantem spectāre multīs iuvābat, sīve rudem lānam in pīmōs orbēs glomerābat,
6 seu opus digitīs subigēbat, seu vellera aequantia nebulās repetītaque longō tractū
7 molliēbat, sīve fūsum teretem levī pollice versābat. Omnēs Arachnēn doctam esse
8 ā Minervā putābant, sed illa tamen negābat. Saepe Arachnē dīcēbat: “Minerva 9 mēcum certāre dēbet!”

10 Pallas anum simulat, et cānōs falsōs in tempora artūsque īfīrmōs, quōs baculō
11 sustinet, addit. Tum puellae Maeoniae dixit: “Nōn grandior aetās omnia quae 12 fugimus habet: ūsus ā sērīs annīs venit. Nē sperne meum consilium. Cēde deae et 13 rogā veniam tuīs dictīs. Illa veniam tibi rogantī dabit.” Arachnē īrāta respondit:
14 “Inops mentis et confecta longā senectā venīs! Nimium diū vixisse nocet! Cūr dea

Commentary

1 *Fābulā dē Prōserpinā . . . probāvit: The story of Arachne and Minerva at the beginning of Book 6 of the poem follows an account of a singing contest between the Muses and the Pierides in Book 5. Calliope, the Muse of epic poetry, tells Minerva about the singing contest, in which she had sung the story of the rape of Proserpina.

2–3 *laudāre est parum . . . spērnī sine poenā: laudāre is the subject of est, and spērnī is a passive infinitive.

4–5 *vestēs factās . . . illam labōrantem spectāre multīs iuvābat: The infinitive spectāre is the subject of iuvābat. vestēs factās and illam labōrantem are objects of spectāre.

5–7 *sīve rudem lānam in pīmōs orbēs glomerābat . . . levī pollice versābat: Ovid vividly describes the process of turning raw wool into thread and rolling it up on a spindle in preparation for weaving.

11–12 *Nōn grandior aetās omnia quae fugimus habet: Approach this as if it reads Nōn grandior aetās habet omnia quae fugimus.

14 *Nimium diū vixisse nocet: The infinitive is the subject of nocet.

Commentary

19–20 Illīc purpura quae aēnum Tyrium sēnsit texitur: The imagery here is of threads being dyed purple in bronze cauldrons.

21–2 Pallas scopulum Māvortis in arce Cecropiā et lītem antīquam dē nōmine terrae pingit: Minerva depicts the battle between herself and Neptune for preeminence in the city of Athens. In the myth, Minerva gives the Athenians the olive tree while Neptune produces a salty spring for them. The Athenians choose the olive tree, and thus Athens becomes Minerva's special city.

22–3 Bis sex caelestēs in sēdibus altīs augustā gravitāte sedent: augustā gravitāte is an ablative of manner. Translate: Twelve heavenly ones sit on high seats with majestic seriousness.

25–9 Arachnē Eurōpam ēlūsam imāgine taurī dēsignat ... lūdit: With bold irreverence, Arachne depicts the male gods in disguise raping both goddesses and mortal women.

31 Nōn Pallas, nōn Līvor carpere illud opus poterat: The word carpere here means to carp at, find a flaw with.

ABLATIVE ABSOLUTE

This construction consists of a noun or pronoun plus a participle in the ablative case. Although ablative absolutes provide relevant information about attendant circumstances, they are grammatically independent from the rest of the sentence. Any type of participle can be used in an ablative absolute. In the sentence Fābulā dē Prōserpinā narrātā, Minerva carmina Mūsārum probāvit, Fābulā dē Prōserpinā narrātā is an ablative absolute consisting of the noun fābula and the perfect passive participle narrātus, a, um. The sentence should be translated With the story about Proserpina having been narrated, Minerva approved the songs of the Muses. In the sentence Mūsā fābulam narrante, Minerva carmina probāvit, Mūsā fābulam narrante is an ablative absolute which uses a present active participle. The sentence should be translated With the Muse narrating the story, Minerva approved the songs. In the sentence Mūsā fābulam narrātūrā, Minerva carmina probāvit, Mūsā fābulam narrātūrā is an ablative absolute which uses a future active participle. The sentence should be translated With the Muse about to narrate the story, Minerva approved the songs.

In the ancient epic tradition, poetry and weaving are seen as parallel activities. While men weave words and thoughts together to express themselves verbally, epic women tend to express themselves visually by weaving textiles. In this story, Minerva depicts herself and the other gods as she wants to be seen, but Arachne's tapestry shows the gods as they actually behave. Some scholars think that Ovid identifies with Arachne and that her woven tapestry stands for the Metamorphoses itself. Indeed, there are some striking similarities between the images on Arachne's tapestry and Ovid's narration of the same stories in the poem proper.

20 Niobe

(Met. 6.146–312)

The Theban queen Niobe offends the goddess Latona and loses everything because of her hubristic attitude.

1 Lȳdia tōta fremit, et rūmor de certāmine Arachnēs per oppida Phrygiae it. Niobē
2 Arachnē cognōverat, nec tamen poenā Arachnēs admonita est. Multa animōs 3 rēgīnae dabant, sed enim nihil illī placuit ut sua prōgeniēs.

4 Nunc Mantō, filia Tiresiae, praescia ventūrōrum, per mediās viās Thēbārum
5 currēbat et clāmābat: “Ismēnides, īte et date Lātōnae tūra cum precibus, et innectite
6 crīnem laurō. Lātōna ōre meō vōs iubet.” Omnēs pārent, et omnēs Thēbāidēs sua 7 tempora iussīs frondibus ḥōrnant tūraque et precēs in sanctis flammīs dant.

8 Ecce Niobē venit cum turbā comitum, spectābilis vestibus Phrygiīs intextō aurō et 9 formōsa—quantum īra sinit. Niobē superba dīcit: “Quī furor est praepōnere
10 auditōs caelestēs vīsīs? Aut cūr Lātōna per ārās colitur; cūr meum nūmen sine tūre 11 est? Tantalus est auctor, cui sōlī tangere mensās superōrum licuit. Mea māter est

13 Domina rēgīae Cadmī sum. Faciēs mea est digna deā. Habeō septem nātās et 14 totidem iuvenēs, et mox generōs nurūsque! Lātōna sōlum est parēns duōrum. Sum 15 felix (quis enim potest negāre hoc?) fēlixque manēbō (quis hoc quoque dubitāre 16 potest?). Laurum capillīs dēpōnite. Mē, nōn Lātōnam, colite. Ego vōbīs colenda 17 sum!” Thēbāides laurōs dēpōnunt et sacra infecta relinquunt, sed Lātōnam tacitō 18 murmurē adhūc colunt.

Commentary

4 praescia ventūrōrum: The future participle ventūrōrum is used as a substantive in the neuter plural. The word praescius, a, um takes a genitive of what is known.

6 Lātōna ōre meō vōs iubet: ōre meō is an ablative of means.

9–10 Quis furor est praepōnere auditōs caelestēs vīsīs: The verb praepōnere takes an accusative object of what is preferred and a dative of what that object is preferred to. There is an understood caelēsīs with the participle vīsīs.

16–17 Ego vōbīs colenda sum: A passive periphrastic construction consists of a future passive participle (gerundive) used with a form of the verb esse. It conveys an idea of necessity and takes a dative of agent rather than an ablative of agent. Translate: I ought to be worshipped by you.

19 Dea Lātōna indignāns est, et filiō et filiae dīcit: “Ego rēgīnam Thēbārum nōn 20 crēdere mē esse deam sentiō. Dīcit mē esse orbam: verba eius in ipsam reccidant.”
 21 Phoebus dīcit: “Rēgīna superba orba sit!” Apollō et Diāna volant per nūbēs, 22 et Thēbānam arcem contingunt. Ibi septem filiī rēgīnae Thēbārum in equōs
 23 condescendunt, et premunt terga rubentia Tyriō sūcō. Iuvenēs habēnās gravēs aurō
 24 regunt. Ē quibus Ismēnus quī pīmus filius mātrī fuerat suum currum in certum
 25 orbē flectit, et conclāmat. Tēlum fixum in mediō pectore gerit, et frēnīs remissīs 26 paulātim in latus ā dextrō armō equī dēfluit. Tum Apollō cēterōs filiōs necāvit.

27 Niobē corporibus gelidīs incumbit, et oscula per omnēs nātōs dispēnsat. Tollēns 28 bracchia ad caelum dīcit: “Crūdēlis Lātōna, per fūnera septem filiōrum efferor:
 29 exsultā victrixque inimīca triumphā! Cūr autem victrix? Post tot fūnera quoque 30 vincō. Septem filiās adhūc habeō!” Dīxerat, et nervus ab arcū sonuit, quī omnēs 31 praeter Niobēn terruit. Illa audāx erat; illa erat stulta. Deinde cūcta sorores ā fīlio 32 Lātōnae subitō necātae sunt.

33 Tum Niobē orba residet inter examīmēs nātōs nātāsque, et dērigēscit. Aura nullōs
 34 capillōs movet, in vultū color est sine sanguine, lūmina stant immōta. Nihil est
 35 vīvum in imāgīne. Lingua ipsa interius cum dūrō palātō congelat, et vēnae 36 dēsistunt posse movēri. Intrā viscera quoque saxum est. Flet tamen, et circumdata 37 turbine in patriam rapta est. Ibi fīxa in cacūmine montis flet, et etiam nunc marmor 38 lacrimās mānat. Hūmānī cum dīs nē certent!

Commentary

20 verba eius in ipsam reccidant: ipsam refers to Niobe. Latona will punish Niobe according to how Niobe has verbally insulted the goddess.

23 premunt terga rubentia Tyriō sūcō: The ablatives Tyriō sūcō are ablatives of means which explain rubentia.

25–6 frēnīs remissīs paulātim in latus ā dextrō armō equī dēfluit: frēnīs remissīs is an ablative absolute. When hit with Apollo's arrow, the youth drops the reins and slowly slides down the horse.

29 Cūr autem victrix?: Niobe questions what she herself has just said, thus revealing that she does not yet believe that Latona has won. Foolishly, she goes on to point out how she still surpasses the goddess.

33–4 Aura nullōs capillōs movet ... lūmina stant immōta: Ovid describes Niobe's transformation into a statue. lūmina means eyes here.

36–7 et circumdata turbine in patriam rapta est: A whirlwind scoops up the petrified Niobe and carries her back to her own country.

PRESENT SUBJUNCTIVE

The present subjunctive is formed by a vowel change in the present system forms. First conjugation uses “ē” for the present subjunctive; second conjugation uses “eā;” third conjugation uses “ā;” third -io and fourth conjugations use “iā.” The present subjunctive of mānō, mānāre, mānāvī, mānātum is shown in the tables.

Active

	Singular	Plural
1st person	mānem	mānēmus
2nd person	mānēs	mānētis
3rd person	mānet	mānent

Passive

JUSSIVE SUBJUNCTIVE

The subjunctive mood is used in many constructions in Latin, and it is necessary to know how it is being used in order to translate it correctly. There are both independent and dependent uses of the subjunctive. The jussive subjunctive is an independent use of the subjunctive mood which conveys a mild or indirect sense of command. It is translated with the word “let” or “may” before the verb. For example, the sentence Verba eius in ipsam reccidant should be translated Let her words fall back onto her.

The story of Niobe directly follows the story of Arachne's weaving contest with Minerva in Book 6, and both stories involve humans who challenge goddesses. In general, the Metamorphoses includes many stories in which humans are punished for attempting to step into divine roles. At the very end of the poem, Ovid offers an account of the apotheosis of Julius Caesar in which Caesar's soul is taken by Venus up to the stars. It is interesting to consider how Ovid's audience might interpret his account of Caesar's divine transformation after so many stories in which humans suffer miserable fates for trying to rival gods.

21 Tereus, Procne, and Philomela

(Met. 6.401–674)

The Thracian king Tereus is overcome with desire when he sees his sister-in-law for the first time and is driven by lust to rape and mutilate her.

1 Pandīōn, rēx Athēnaeus, Thrēicium Tēreum sibi cōnūbiō Procñēs iunxit. Nōn Iūnō,
2 nōn Hymenaeus aderat. Eumenidēs facēs raptās dē fūnere tenuērunt et torum
3 strāvērunt. Būbō tectō incubuit thalamīque in culmine sēdit. Procñē Tēreusque hāc 4 ave coniunctī sunt, et parentēs hāc ave factī sunt.

5 Post quinque autumnōs, Procñē cum blanditiā virō dīcit: “Cupiō vīsitāre meam
6 sorōrem, Philomēlam. Sī ulla grātia mea est, mitte mē Athēnās vel hūc Philomēlam
7 invītā.” Tēreus carīnās in freta dēdūcī iubet, et vēlō rēmigiōque portum Cecropium
8 intrat. Dexteram socerō dat, et Tēreus coepit referre mandāta coniugis. Ecce
9 Philomēla dīves parātū venit, dīvitior formā. Conspectā virgine Tēreus subito
10 exardet nōn secus quam sī quis suppōnit ignem aristīs cānīs. Faciēs quidem digna, 11 sed etiam innāta libidō rēgem exstimalat.

12 Impetus illī erat vel corrumpere nūtrīcem vel sollicitāre Philomēlam ipsam
13 mūneribus datīs vel rapere et dēfendere raptam bellō. Nihil est quod nōn audēbit.
14 Iam Tēreus morās malē ferēbat, et amor fācundum faciēbat. Philomēla, quae
15 multum vidēre sorōrem cupiēbat, rogābat patrem suum sinere sē cum Tēreō 16 nāvigāre. Tēreus spectābat eam quae dīcēbat blanda et circumdābat bracchia in 17 collō patris, et rēx Thrāciae cupiēbat eadem blanda et bracchia. Pandīōn timēbat ut 18 Philomēla tūta esset, sed precēs rēgis et filiae patrem vīcērunt. Philomēla gaudēbat.

Commentary

1 *Pandīōn . . . sibi cōnūbiō Procñēs iunxit: cōnūbiō is an ablative of means and governs the genitive Procñēs.

7–8 *et vēlō rēmigiōque portum Cecropium intrat: vēlō and rēmigiō are ablatives of means.

9 *dīves parātū venit, dīvitior formā: The ablatives are ablatives of specification with dīves and dīvitior. Translate: rich in her apparel, richer in beauty.

9–10 *Tēreus subito exardet nōn secus quam sī quis suppōnit ignem aristīs cānīs: Ovid uses the imagery of someone setting fire to dried ears of grain to illustrate how inflamed with lust Tereus becomes. Ovid uses similar imagery to describe Apollo's desire in the story of Apollo and Daphne.

19 Ut semel Philomēla in carīnā pictā posita est, Tēreus exclāmat: “Vīcī!” Iter factum
 20 est, et carīna in portum Thrēicium nāvигat. Rēx Philomēlam in stabulum in silvīs
 21 trahit. Tēreus Philomēlam, timentem nē quid malum accidat, spectat, et puellae 22 territae dicit: “Tē rapiam!” Tum malus rēx Philomēlam, clāmantem parentem, 23 sorōrem, et dīvōs, rapit. Ubi mēns redit, Philomēla laniat capillōs et clāmat: “Ō
 24 barbare, crūdēlis! Nec mandāta parentis cum lacrimīs piīs nec cūra sorōris nec mea
 25 virginitās nec coniugīalia iūra tē mōvent? Pudōre prōiecto omnibus tē rapuisse mē 26 dīcam!” Talibus verbīs īra et nōn minus hāc metus tyrannī crēscit. Tēreus metuit nē 27 Procnē sē Philomēlam rapuisse cognoscat. Ensem ā vāgīnā liberat. Philomēla 28 iugulum parat, sed rēx malus linguam forcipe comprehendit et ense abstulit. Rādix 29 micat, et ipsa lingua in terrā tremēns iacet.

30 Sōl bis sex signa annō actō lustrāverat: quid Philomēla faciet? Custōdia fugam
 31 claudit, et moenia stabulī solidō saxō rigent. Ōs mūtum indice factī caret. Ingenium 32 dolōris est grande, et sollertia in miserīs rēbus venit. Stāmen dē barbaricā tēlā
 33 suspendit, purpureāsque notās filīs albīs intexuit, indicium sceleris. Perfectum 34 servae trādidit, et gestū eam ferre ad Procnēn iūssit. Serva ad Procnēn pertulit.
 35 Mātrōna ēvolvit vestēs, fātum miserābile suae germānae lēgit, et siluit. Illā nocte
 36 Procnē ad stabulum vēnit, portās refrēgit, et germānam liberāvit.

37 Dum Procnē īrā ardet, Itys, filius suus, ad mātrem venit. Vidēns puerum Procnē 38 putat lētum Ityos pūnītūrum esse Tēreum. Procnē Ityn trahit, et ēnse puerum, 39 clāmantem et tendentem manūs, ferit. Sorōrēs dilaniant membra. Inde pars in aēnīs
 40 cavīs exsultat, pars in veribus strīdit. Itys est nunc cibus, et Tēreus sua vīscera 41 edit. Tum sorōres tyrannō facinus patefaciunt. Flēns Thrācius necāre fēminās 42 temptat. Currentēs sorōres videntur pendere pennīs; sunt avēs! Tēreus vēlōx in 43 volucrem vertitur; est epops!

Commentary

19 *Ut semel Philomēla in carīnā pictā posita est: Ut semel means as soon as.

26 *īra et nōn minus hāc metus tyrannī crēscit: hāc is an ablative of comparison and refers to īra. Translate: anger and, not less than this, fear . . .

30 *Sōl bis sex signa annō actō lustrāverat: Ovid refers to the zodiac signs appearing through the year to indicate that a year has gone by. annō actō is an ablative absolute.

38–9 *Procnē Ityn trahit . . . ferit: Ityn is accusative singular. Note that Procnē's anger drives her to mutilate her son as Tereus had mutilated her sister, something which Ovid emphasizes by having both Philomela and Itys call out to a parent as they are attacked.

IMPERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE

The imperfect subjunctive is formed by adding personal endings to the present infinitive. The imperfect subjunctive of pūniō, pūnīre, pūnīvī, pūnītūm is:

Active

	Singular	Plural
1st person	pūnīrem	pūnīrēmus
2nd person	pūnīrēs	pūnīrētis

Passive

	Singular	Plural
1st person	pūnīrer	pūnīrēmur
2nd person	pūnīrēris	pūnīrēminī
3rd person	pūnīrētur	pūnīrentur

Imperfect subjunctive of sum, esse, fui, futūrum

	Singular	Plural
1st person	essem	essēmus
2nd person	esses	essētis
3rd person	esset	essent

FEAR CLAUSES

Fear clauses are used after verbs of fearing to indicate what is feared, although sometimes an implied idea of fear can precede them. They are introduced by the words nē and ut, but, unlike most clauses which are introduced by ut, positive clauses are introduced by nē and negative clauses are introduced by ut. The sentence Tēreus Philomēlam, timentem nē quid malum accidat, spectat contains a positive fear clause introduced by the present participle timentem. It should be translated Tereus looks at Philomela, who fears that something bad will happen. The sentence Pandīon timēbat ut Philomēla tūta esset contains a negative fear clause introduced by the finite verb timēbat. It should be translated Pandion feared that Philomela would not be safe.

The rape-narrative about Tereus, Procne, and Philomela is one of the most violent stories in the Metamorphoses, and Ovid relates it in graphic detail. At the beginning of the account, Ovid tells his audience that Tereus is descended from Mars Gradivus. Augustus restored many temples and took special interest in traditional Roman cults, including the cult of Mars Gradivus. The Salii, twelve priests who performed ritual processions and dances throughout the city, were championed by the princeps and probably held feasts in the Forum of Augustus. Augustus' name was actually inserted into the Salian Hymn circa 28 BCE. It is possible that Ovid is using the story to make a political statement about the silencing of speech under tyranny, especially when one considers it along with the story of Arachne and Minerva, where a woven tapestry also reveals the truth.

22 Boreas and Orithyia

(Met. 6.675–721)

Boreas, the north wind, takes Orithyia to be his wife by force when her father rejects him.

1 Dolor Philomēlae et Procnēs Pandīonem ad Tartareās umbrās mīsit. Erechtheus,
2 potēns armīs et iūstitiā, sceptrum locī moderāmenque rērum cēpit. Quattuor
3 iuvenēs ab illō nātū sunt et totidem fēminae. Forma duārum, Ōrīthyiae et Procris,
4 pār erat. Ē quibus Procris coniunx Cephalī erat. Athēniēnsēs Tēreum Thrācesque

Commentary

4–5 Athēniēnsēs Tēreum Thrācesque Ȧdērunt ... colēbat: The Athenians hated the Thracians because of Tereus' outrages against Procne and Philomela. Because Boreas inhabited a land near Thrace, he too was hated by the Athenians.

6 Boreās Erechtheum cōnūbium Ōrīthyiae rogābat: The verb rogāre takes an accusative both of the person asked and the thing requested.

8 quae illī ventō solita est: The antecedent of quae is īra.

9 saevitiam et vīrēs īramque animōsque minācēs: The accusatives explain Boreas' tēla.

10 quārum ūsus mē dēdecet: The impersonal verb dēdecet takes an accusative of the person or thing not fitted. The relative pronoun quarum refers to precibus. Translate: The use of which things is not fitting for me.

11–14 Īdem ... Īdem: These demonstratives have an adverbial force here. Translate: Likewise ...

- aperiō, aperīre, aperuī, apertum: to open, uncover, lay bare
- Athēniēnsis, e: of Athens
- caverna, ae f.: cavern, cave
- Cephalus, ī m.: Cephalus, son of Pandion
- concurrētus, ūs m.: collision, attack
- concutiō, concutere, concussiī, concussum: to beat, strike, shake violently

Commentary

16–17 *Erechtheus socer mihi nōn ḍrandus erat, sed faciendus erat: Understand esse before socer and mihi, a dative of agent, with both passive periphrastic constructions.

18–19 *quārum iactātibus: iactātibus is an ablative of means. Translate: by the flutterings of which

21–2 *prius . . . quam: The conjunction priusquam (separated here) means before.

24 *Quī cētera mātris, sed pennās genitōris habuērunt: The antecedent of quī is partū gemellōs. Relative pronouns often begin sentences in Latin.

DEPONENT VERBS

Deponent verbs have passive forms but are translated actively. So, ūtor is translated I use, even though it looks like a passive verb, and ūtī is translated to use rather than to be used. Deponent verbs only have three principal parts, and all of these have active meanings. The participles of deponent verbs are translated just like the participles of regular verbs, with the exception of the perfect participle, which for deponent verbs is translated actively (see table). Some deponent verbs, including ūtor (to use), fungor (to occupy oneself with something), potior (to possess), and fruor (to enjoy), take an ablative object.

PARTICIPLES OF DEPONENT VERBS

Present active participle	ūtēns	using
Perfect participle	ūsus, a, um	having used
Future active participle	ūtūrus, a, um	about to use
Future passive participle	ūtendus, a, um	to be used, needing to be used

---

The story of Boreas and Orithyia ends Book 6 of the Metamorphoses, and the final lines of the book are about the sons born to the north wind and his new bride, Calais and Zetes. Ovid describes how the boys later went with Jason and the Argonauts to fetch the golden fleece. The story of the quest for the golden fleece and Jason's love affair with Medea begins the very next book. Ovid's account of the story of Boreas and Orithyia is quite short, and one wonders why he did not just save it for the beginning of Book 7. This organization is another example of how stories in the poem frequently bleed from one book to the next, and there often do not seem to be clear divisions between books, thus making Ovid's poem seem even more like a complex tapestry of overlapping images.

23 Medea's rejuvenation of Aeson

(Met. 7.159–293)

Medea, the daughter of King Aeëtes of Colchis and a woman skilled in witchcraft, restores youthfulness to Jason's father.

1 Calais et Zētēs, filii Boreae, cum Iāsone ut vellere aureō potīrentur nāvigāvērunt.
2 Mēdēa, filia Aeētae, quī vellus habēbat, capta amōre Iāsonem herbīs et verbīs cantatīs
3 iūvit, et Iāsōn vellus cēpit. Filius Aesonis, superbus spoliō et portāns sēcum
4 Mēdēam coniugem, portum Iolcī tetigit. Haemoniae mātrēs grandaevīque patrēs
5 dōna prō nātīs receptīs tulērunt, et tūra in flammīs liquefēcērunt. Victimae cecidērunt.
6 Omnēs Iāsonī grātabantur. Aesōn autem abfuit, iam fessus senīlibus annīs.

7 Iāsōn dīcit: “Ō coniunx, cui confiteor mē dēbēre salūtem meam, quamquam cuncta mihi
8 dedistū, sī tua carmina facere hoc possunt (quid enim nōn possunt?), dēme meōs annōs et 9 adde annōs meōs demptōs patrī.” Nec lacrimās tenet, et Mēdēa pietatē rogantis mōta est.
10 Mēdēa respondet: “Quod scelus ē tuō ūre excidit, coniunx? Videorne posse transcrībere 11 cuiquam spatium tuae vītae? Hecatē hoc nōn sinet. Sed experiar dare maius mūnus istō 12 quod petis, Iāsōn. Meā arte, nōn tuīs annīs, longum aevum patris revocāre temptābō.”

Commentary

7 cui confiteor mē dēbēre salūtem meam: Ovid begins with a relative pronoun and then moves into indirect statement after confiteor. Translate: to whom I confess that I owe my welfare.

11–12 maiis mūnus istō quod petis: istō is an ablative of comparison after maiis and also the antecedent of quod.

absum, abesse, abfui, abfutūrum: to be away from, be absent
Aeētēs, Aeētae m.: Aeëtes, king of Colchis
Aesōn, Aesonis m.: Aeson, father of Jason cantō, cantāre, cantāvī, cantātūm: to sing confiteor, confiterī, confessus sum: to acknowledge, confess dōnum, ī n.: gift
grandaevus, a, um: aged, old grātor, grātarī, grātātūs sum: to congratulate, wish joy to Haemonius, a, um: of Haemonia, of Thessaly
Hecatē, ēs f.: Hecate, goddess of witchcraft

Iāsōn, Iāsonis m.: Jason, leader of the Argonauts
Iolcus, ī f.: Iolcus, a city in Thessaly and Jason's home liquefaciō, liquefacere, liquefeci,
liquefactum: to melt, liquefy
Mēdēa, ae f.: Medea, a princess of Colchis and a sorceress
pietās, pietātis f.: sense of duty, piety potior, potīrī, potitus sum: to obtain, possess (+ acc. or abl.)
salus, salūtis f.: health, welfare, safety
senilis, e: aged, old transcribō, transcribere, transcripsi, transcriptum: to write over, transfer, convey

13 Iam nōna diēs et nōna nox Mēdēam lustrantem terrās in currū pennīsque dracōnum ut
 14 aptās herbās et ūtileś sūcōs invenīret vīdit. Statuit bīnās ārās dē caespīte: dextera āra 15 Hecatēs est, et in laevā parte āra Iuventae est. Duās scrobēs ut sacra faciat effodit.
 16 Cultrum in guttur bidentis ātri cōnīcit, et sanguine patulās fossās perfundit. Tum 17 invergēns carchēsia liquidī mellis et carchēsia tepidī lactis, simul verba fundit.
 18 Nūminibūs precibūs plācātīs, Mēdēa corpus fessum Aesonis pōferī ad ārās iubet.
 19 Carmine Aesonem in somnum resolvit, et corpus simile exanimī in herbīs strātīs porrigit.

 20 Mēdēa, passīs capillīs, rītū Bacchantium flagrantēs ārās circumit. Ter flammā, ter aquā, 21 ter sulfure lustrat. Intereā medicāmen in aēnō fervet; medicāmen exsultat et spūmīs
 22 tumentibus albet. Mēdēa addit herbās, et immiscet. Quācumque ignis spūmās ex
 23 cavō aēnō ēicit et guttae calentēs in terram cadunt, humus vernal flōrēsque et mollia 24 pābula surgunt. Quae simul atque vīdet, ēnse strictō Mēdēa iugulum senis reclūdit, et 25 Mēdēa, passa veterum cruōrem exīre, corpus sūcīs suīs replet. Postquam Aesōn
 26 medicāmen combibit, barba et coma colōrem nigrum rapit, maciēs fugit, pallor situsque 27 abeunt, et membra luxuriant. Aesōn mīrātur et hunc esse sē ante quater dēnōs annōs 28 reminiscitur.

Commentary

13–14 *Iam nōna diēs et nōna nox … vīdit: Ovid personifies the day and night here, making them the subjects of the sentence. pennīs is an ablative of means. The singular verb vīdit emphasizes the subjects as individual elements.

18 *Nūminibūs precibūs plācātīs: precibus is an ablative of means. The other ablatives are used as an ablative absolute.

24 *Quae simul atque vīdet: The antecedents of quae, which is neuter plural, are all of the things which have just been described.

27 *ante quater dēnōs annōs: Literally, before four-tens of years. Translate: forty years before.

- albeō, albēre: to be white āter, ātra, ātrum: black, dark
Bacchantēs, Bacchantium f. pl.: followers of Bacchus

PURPOSE CLAUSES

Purpose clauses are subjunctive clauses which indicate why something is done. They are introduced by ut or, in the case of a negative purpose clause, nē. In the sentence Calais et Zētēs, filī Boreae, cum Iāsone ut vellere aureō potīrentur nāvigāvērunt, the purpose clause is ut vellere aureō potīrentur. The sentence should be translated Calais and Zetes, sons of Boreas, sailed with Jason in order to obtain the golden fleece. Purpose clauses are common, but there also are other types of subjunctive clauses introduced by ut. Frequently, you must use context to determine which kind of clause is at work.

Medea is the granddaughter of the Sun-god Helios, and she is a niece of Circe, the sorceress who turns Odysseus' men into pigs in the Odyssey. Like her aunt, Medea is skilled in magic and in concocting powerful potions, and Jason very much is dependent on her talents for his success in bringing the golden fleece back from Colchis to Iolcus. When they return to Iolcus with the fleece, Pelias refuses to turn the throne over to Jason, who is the rightful heir, and Medea avenges the offense in a manner so gruesome that the two are driven out of Iolcus. They end up in Corinth, where Jason casts Medea aside for the princess Glauke. To punish Jason, Medea sends the princess a poisoned robe and then kills her own children. She then escapes to Athens, where King Aegeus accepts her as his wife. Later, Medea attempts to kill Aegeus' son Theseus.

24 Medea's punishment of Pelias

(Met. 7.294–349)

When the daughters of Pelias learn of Medea's rejuvenation of Aeson, they ask Medea to restore their father's vigor. Medea uses the opportunity to avenge Pelias' ill treatment of her husband.

1 Iuventūte Aesonis redditā Mēdēa falsum odium cum coniuge adsimulat, et supplex
2 ad līmina Peliae confugit. Quoniam Pelīas ipse gravis senectūte est, nātae Mēdēam
3 excipiunt. Tempore parvō, callida fēmina imāgine falsā amīcītiae fidem virginum
4 capit, et, dum dicit situm Aesonis demptum esse (in hāc parte fabulae morātur),
5 spēs est virginibus arte Mēdēae suum parentem posse revirēscere. Nātae artem
6 similem petunt. Illa brevī spatiō silet, et dubitāre vidētur. Animōs rogantūm fictā
7 gravitatē suspendit. Ubi mox pollicētur, dīcit: “Ut fidūcia maior huius mūneris 8 sit, dux gregis quī maximus aevō est inter ovēs agnus medicāmine meō fiet.”

9 Prōtinus lāniger, fessus innumerī annīs, attrahēbatur, cornibus flexīs circum cava
10 tempora. Mēdēa cultrō marcens guttur fōdit, et ferrum exiguō sanguine maculāvit;
11 membra sūcōsque tantōs venēficōs in aēnō cavō mersit ut cornua exūrerent et 12 corpus minuerent. Tener bālātus in mediō aēnō auditus est. Sine morā, virginibus 13 bālātum mīrantibus, agnus exsiluit et lactāns ūber quaesīvit.

14 Filiae Peliae obstipuērunt. Postquam prōmissa fidem exhibērunt, tum vērō filiae 15 artem Mēdēae cupiēbant. Post trēs noctēs, sīdera radiantia micābant, cum fallax

Commentary

3 *Tempore parvō: This is an example of an ablative of time within which. Translate: within a short time.

5 *spēs est virginibus arte Mēdēae suum parentem posse revirēscere: The idea that there is hope (spēs est) introduces the indirect statement.

6–7 *Animōs rogantūm fictā gravitatē suspendit: In other words, Medea holds the daughters in suspense with feigned seriousness.

8 *quī maximus aevō est: aevō is an ablative of specification which explains maximus. Translate: greatest in age.

9 *cornibus flexīs: an ablative absolute.

10 *ferrum exiguō sanguine maculāvit: The ram is so old that it has very little blood.

14 *Postquam prōmissa fidem exhibērunt: The substantive prōmissa is the subject of exhibērunt.

 33 sanguine nātōrum suōrum perfūsus est. Quis huic fābulae crēdiderit?

Commentary

17–18 quem cantus et potentia magicōrum verbōrum dederant: The word somnus is the antecedent of quem. Medea had caused the king and his guards to sleep by means of her spells.

24 Ut quaeque pia est: Translate ut here as as. quaeque refers to each of Pelias' daughters. In other words, in acting to help their father, the daughters actually commit an impious act.

24 Nē scelerāta sit: This is a negative purpose clause.

31 serpentibus pennātis and Pennīs vīpereīs: Both constructions are ablatives of means.

32–3 Postquam nova nūpta ... perfūsus est: In Corinth, Jason rejects Medea for the princess of that city. Medea sends a poisoned robe to the girl which causes her to burn up and then kills her own children to punish Jason.

33 Quis huic fābulae crēdiderit: The subjunctive is used in questions implying doubt, indignation, or impossibility. Here, a perfect subjunctive is used. Translate: Who could believe this story?

adlevō, adlevāre, adlevāvī, adlevātum: to lift up, erect agitō, agitāre, agitāvī, agitātum: to drive about, keep in movement, agitate caecus, a, um: blind
calidus, a, um: warm, hot Colchicus, a, um: of Colchis, a region on the Black Sea
consurgō, consurgere, consurrexi, consur-rectum: to raise oneself, rise, stand up Corinthius, a, um: of Corinth, a city in southern Greece
cubitum, ī n.: elbow
ēmittō, ēmittere, ēmisi, ēmissum: to send out, send away
exigō, exigere, exēgi, exactum: to drive out hauriō, haurīre, hausī, haustum: to draw out, drink

impius, a, um: impious, disrespectful impōnō, impōnere, imposū, impositum: to lay or place upon, impose on inānis, e: empty, void

PERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE

The perfect subjunctive active is almost identical to the future perfect indicative. When translating, it sometimes can be difficult to determine whether a verb is future perfect indicative or perfect subjunctive, and one must use context to decide which form is at work. The perfect subjunctive passive is formed by a combination of the perfect passive participle and the present subjunctive of esse.

crēdō, crēdere, crēdīt, crēditum: active

	Singular	Plural
1st person	crēdiderim	crēdiderimus
2nd person	crēdideris	crēdideritis
3rd person	crediderit	crēdiderint

crēdō, crēdere, crēdīt, crēditum: passive

	Singular	Plural
1st person	crēditum sim	crēdita sīmus
2nd person	crēditum sīs	crēdita sītis
3rd person	crēditum sit	crēdita sint

sum, esse, fui, futūrum

	Singular	Plural
1st person	fuerim	fuerimus
2nd person	fueris	fueritis
3rd person	fuerit	fuerint

RESULT CLAUSES

Like purpose clauses, result clauses are subjunctive clauses introduced by ut, although negative result clauses use words other than nē, such as nōn; numquam; nihil; or nullus, a, um. Result clauses show the outcome of an action. It sometimes can be difficult to distinguish between result clauses and purpose clauses, but words in the main clause such as ita (thus); tantus, a, um (so much, so great); sīc (thus); and tam (so, to such a degree) often signal that an ut clause which follows is a result clause. For example, in the sentence Membra sūcosque tantōs venēficos in aēnō cavō mersit ut cornua exūrerent et corpus minuerent, the adjective tantōs indicates that ut cornua exūrerent et corpus minuerent is a result clause. The sentence should be translated

She plunged the limbs and juices so magical in the hollow bronze that they burned off the horns and reduced the body in size. That the juices burned off the horns and reduced the animal in size is the outcome of the power of the magical juices. A purpose clause would indicate why Medea used the magical juices rather than the result of their use.

Medea's use of potions and magical drugs is in keeping with ancient ideas about the exotic nature of such compounds. In Homer's Odyssey, for example, Helen drops a pharmakon, which is a Greek word for drug, into the wine when Telemachus visits Sparta. The situation is uncomfortable because Telemachus is looking for his father, who went to war for Helen's sake, and Helen aims to ease the tension. Homer tells his audience that Helen got her drug from Egypt, where she met a woman skilled in such arts. Helen's source for the drug is exotic, just as Medea herself is exotic in that she is from Colchis on the Black Sea. Interestingly, poetry itself is frequently described by ancient authors as having an effect on its audience which is similar to the effect of powerful drugs.

25 Scylla and Nisus

(Met. 8.1–151)

When the daughter of King Nisus falls in love with Minos, who wages war against her kingdom, she offers the enemy-king her father's famous purple lock of hair.

1 Rēx Mīnōs lītora Megarae vastābat et vīrēs suās in urbe temptābat, quam Nīsus
2 habēbat. Cui crīnis purpureus inter honōrātōs cānōs in mediō vertice haerēbat. Crīnis
3 splendidus fidūcia magnī regnī erat. Sex novae lūnae resurrexērant, et adhūc fortūna
4 belli pendēbat, diūque Victōria inter utrumque rēgem dubiīs pennīs volābat.

5 In urbe, turris addita erat vōcālibus mūrīs in quibus prōlēs Lātōnae fertur auream
6 lyram dēposuisse: sonus eius in saxō haesit. In pace, Scylla, filia Nīsī, illūc
7 ascendere solēbat, et, iactāns lapillum, resonantia saxa petere solēbat. Nunc in 8 bellō, dē turre spectāre certāmina Martis solēbat. Iam nōmina procerum armaque 9 equōsque habitūsque pharetrāsque cognōvit.

10 Ante omnēs aliōs faciem Mīnōis nōverat—plūs etiam quam satis nōvisse est.
11 Mīnōs, rēx Crētūm, seu caput casside cristāta abdiderat, in galeā formōsus erat; seu 12 clipeum fulgentem sumpserat, clipeum sūmpsisse decebat; seu hastilia torserat, 13 virgō artem et vīrēs laudābat. Cum vērō faciem casside demptā nūdāverat
14 purpureusque tergum albī equī insigne strātīs pictīs premēbat, vix virgō compos
15 mentis sānae erat. Impetus illī erat ferre virgineōs gradūs per agmen hostile; 16 impetus illī erat mittere corpus ē summīs in Cnōsia castra.

Commentary

2 Cui crīnis purpureus: The antecedent of cui is Nīsus.

2–3 Crīnis splendidus fidūcia magnī regnī erat: Nisus' purple lock of hair was his source of strength, so the security of his kingdom was dependent on it.

5–6 turris addita erat vōcālibus mūrīs ... dēposuisse: The walls of rock themselves produced musical sounds, perhaps from the wind blowing through them. fertur is used here to mean it is said and introduces the indirect statement. Latona is Apollo's mother.

10 plūs etiam quam satis nōvisse est: Translate: even more than it is sufficient to know. The infinitive is used with satis est. Ovid's language reveals Scylla's powerful attraction to the Cretan king.

14 purpureusque tergum ... premēbat: Minos is wearing the regal color purple. insigne describes tergum, and strātīs pictīs is an ablative qualifying insigne.

15 impetus illī erat: illī refers to Scylla. In other words, she wants to walk or jump off the tower into the Cretan camp.

32 Lēgibus captīs hostibus impositīs, Mīnōs imperāvit ut classis solverētur et puppēs
 33 rēmige impellerentur. Scylla clāmat: “Mē miseram! Mīnōs viros eius properāre 34 iubet, et cīvēs patriae mē ōdērunt. Sequar tē invītum, rēx Cnōsiace, et amplexa 35 puppim per freta longa trahar!” Vix dīxerat, insiluit in undās, et secūta est ratēs 36 cupidine faciente vīrēs. Invidiōsa comes Cnōsiacae carīnae haesit. Pater, quī (modo 37 factus haliaeetus) iam pendēbat in aurā, ībat ut illam rōstrō aduncō lacerāret. Illa

 39 mūtata in avem Cīris vocātur, et hoc nōmen ā tonsō capillō adepta est.

Commentary

18 Sī fēmina quae tē peperit: Minos' mother was Europa, whom Jupiter impregnated.

19 amore illius: The genitive illius is an objective genitive. Translate: love for that woman.

22–3 Opus est mihi crīne paternō: Opus est (there is need) is a common construction in Latin. Here, the person in need is in the dative, and the thing needed is in the ablative.

23 pretiōsior aurō: aurō is an ablative of comparison. Translate: more precious than gold.

25 et (heu facinus!) parentem crīne spoliat: The verb spoliare here takes an accusative of the person robbed and an ablative of the thing taken.

32 Lēgibus captīs hostibus impositīs: Lēgibus impositīs is an ablative absolute, and captīs hostibus is dative after impositīs.

36 cupidine faciente vīrēs: cupidine faciente is an ablative absolute. vīrēs is the object of faciente.

37–8 Illa metū puppim dīmīsit: metū is an ablative of cause. Translate: That one let go of the ship out of fear.

JUSSIVE NOUN CLAUSES

Jussive noun clauses are another type of subjunctive clause introduced by ut or nē, so they are easy to confuse with result clauses and, especially, with purpose clauses. As the name suggests, a jussive noun clause is an indirect command. These clauses are often introduced by verbs of seeking, asking, urging, or ordering, and they essentially function as objects of the verbs which introduce them. In the sentence Amor mē hortātur ut perdam quod obstat meō amōrī, the ut clause is a jussive noun clause, and the sentence should be translated Love urges me to destroy that which stands against my love. Essentially, a jussive noun clause is just another way of expressing indirect speech, like accusative-infinitive constructions. Literally, the sentence above reads Love urges me that I destroy that which stands against my love. Here, the ut clause serves as the object of the verb hortātur. To some degree, jussive noun clauses are interchangeable with accusative-infinitive constructions, although certain verbs consistently govern one or the other.

In this story, Ovid presents Scylla as a girl so overcome by passion for Minos that she commits an act of incredible treachery, something which she probably would not do under normal circumstances. In Greek and Roman literature, erotic love is associated with madness, and this association is especially true for women. In Vergil's Aeneid, for example, when Dido discovers that Aeneas is secretly preparing to leave Carthage, she loses her mind and rages through the city in the manner of a female follower of Bacchus who has been intoxicated with the power of the god, and ultimately she kills herself. Erotic love causes one to lose control of oneself just like wine, drugs, and Bacchus himself.

26 Pomona and Vertumnus

(Met. 14.623–771)

Vertumnus attempts to win over the wood nymph Pomona by disguise and persuasion.

1 Pōmōna sub rēge Procā vixit, quā nulla inter Latīnās hamadryadēs hortōs sollertius
2 coluit, et nulla studiōsior arboreī fētūs fuit. Illa nōn silvās nec amnēs, sed rūs et

Commentary

1–2 quā nulla . . . sollertius coluit: The antecedent of the relative pronoun is Pōmōna. It is in the ablative because it functions as an ablative of comparison after sollertius. Translate: than whom no one of the wood nymphs of Latium cultivated gardens more skillfully.

6 Nulla cupīdō Veneris erat: Veneris is an objective genitive and stands for romantic love rather than the goddess herself. In other words, Pomona is not interested in romance.

14 Per multās figūrās poterat spectāre Pomonam: Vertumnus uses his many disguises to create opportunities to see Pomona.

16–17 quālia . . . dedisset: The word quālia refers to oscula.

18 Quam postquam: The antecedent of quam is ulmus. Disguised as the old woman, Vertumnus praises the elm with its companion-vine to allow him to bring up the subject of love and coupling.

Commentary

19–20 *Nisi . . . foret: foret is the third person singular imperfect subjunctive of esse.

22 *quam Helenae vel coniugī Ulixis: Helen was the most beautiful woman in the world, and Ulysses' wife, Penelope, was pursued by over a hundred suitors while the hero was away at war.

22–3 *quae . . . amo: The relative pronoun quae refers to anus, but the verb is in the first person because Vertumnus is talking about himself in disguise.

25 *Miseresce Vertumni: The verb miserescere takes a genitive object of the person or thing pitied.

26–7 *saevior fretō surgente et dūrior ferrō: The ablatives fretō and ferrō are ablatives of comparison.

acclīnātus, a, um: leaning on saevior, ius: more savage

sēlīgō, sēligere, sēlēgī, sēlectum: to choose, select serō, serere, seruī, sertum: to connect, bind together, weave
truncus, ī m.: trunk of a tree
Ulixes, Ulixis m.: Ulysses, the Greek hero Odysseus

PLUPERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE

The pluperfect subjunctive active is formed by adding personal endings to the perfect infinitive. The pluperfect subjunctive passive is formed by a combination of the perfect passive participle and the imperfect subjunctive of esse.

inserō, insere, inseruī, insertum: active

	Singular	Plural
1st person	inseruissem	inseruissēmus
2nd person	inseruissēs	inseruissētis
3rd person	inseruisset	inseruissent

inserō, insere, inseruī, insertum: passive

	Singular	Plural
1st person	insertum essem	inserta essēmus
2nd person	insertum esses	inserta essētis
3rd person	insertum esset	inserta essent

sum, esse, fūī, futūrum

	Singular	Plural
1st person	fuissem	fuiſſēmus
2nd person	fuisſēs	fuiſſētis
3rd person	fuisset	fuiſſent

CONDITIONS

There are six kinds of conditional sentences in Latin. Three use verbs in the indicative, and three use verbs in the subjunctive. Conditions are often introduced by sī or nisi. They have two elements: a protasis, which is the premise, and an apodosis, which is the outcome.

- Simple Fact Present: Uses present indicative verbs in both the protasis and the apodosis. Sī puerum amat, puella beata est. (If she loves the boy, the girl is happy.)
- Simple Fact Past: Uses imperfect or perfect indicative verbs in both the protasis and the apodosis. Sī puerum amābat, puella beata erat. (If she loved the boy, the girl was happy.)
- Future More Vivid: Uses future or future perfect indicative in both the protasis and the apodosis. Sī puerum amābit, puella beata erit. (If she loves [will love] the boy, the girl will be happy.)

- Future Less Vivid: Uses present subjunctive in both the protasis and the apodosis. Sī puerum amet, puella beata sit. (If she should love the boy, the girl would be happy.)
- Present Contrary to Fact: Uses imperfect subjunctive in both the protasis and the apodosis. Sī puerum amāret, puella beata foret. (If she were loving the boy, the girl would be happy.)
- Past Contrary to Fact: Uses pluperfect subjunctive in both the protasis and the apodosis. Sī puerum amāvisset, puella beata fuisset. (If she had loved the boy, the girl would have been happy.)

In order to translate conditions correctly, it is essential to recognize which type of condition is at work. In the sentence Sī truncā stāret caelebs sine vīte, nihil praeter frondēs habēret, both verbs are in the imperfect subjunctive, so the sentence is a present contrary to fact condition and should be translated If the trunk were standing uncoupled, without the vine, it would have nothing besides leaves. In the sentence Cupiās amāre, sint tibi plūrēs amantēs quam Helenae vel coniugī Ulixis, both verbs are in the present subjunctive, so the sentence is a future less vivid condition and should be translated Should you desire to love, there would be more lovers for you than for Helen or for the wife of Ulysses. Note that in this condition, the protasis is not introduced by sī or nisi.

The story of Pomona and Vertumnus is one of many stories in the Metamorphoses in which a god operates in disguise. In the story about the contest between Arachne and Minerva, for example, Minerva is disguised as an old woman when she first approaches Arachne. In that same story, Arachne's tapestry depicts the male gods disguising themselves in order to deceive and rape both mortal and divine women. Ovid tells his audience that the frustrated Vertumnus prepares to use force against Pomona but does not end up doing so when Pomona unexpectedly falls in love with him upon seeing his true form. Thus, unlike many of Ovid's stories which involve disguise and deception, this story ends happily.

27 Quirinus

(Met. 14.805–51)

After Romulus successfully establishes Rome, he is honored with deification. His wife Hersilia follows him.

1 Rōmulus erat pīmus rēx Rōmānōrum, et Māvors erat pater Rōmulī. Rhēa Silvia, ā
2 Māvorte rapta, mater rēgis Rōmānī erat. Dum Rōmulus iūra populō dat, Māvors
3 casside positā tālibus verbīs parentem dīvōrumque hominumque adfātūr: “Tempus

14 digniorem pulvīnāribus altīs habuit. Quālis est forma Quirīnī. Rōmulus est 15 Quirīnus, novus deus!

Commentary

4 Cum rēs Rōmāna valeat: rēs Rōmāna means the Roman state.

7 Summa . . . sit rata: Jussive subjunctive. The participle rata is used here in a passive sense to mean ratified, fixed, or settled, even though it is from a deponent verb. Translate: May the sum of your words be ratified.

10 ductum equīs tēmōne cruentō pressīs: Ovid describes the yoke of the chariot as bloody to illustrate the ferocity of the horses.

12–13 ut glāns plumbea missa lātā fundā: lātā fundā is an ablative of means.

14 digniorem pulvīnāribus altīs: dignior, ius (the comparative of dignus, a, um) can be followed by an ablative or a genitive. Romulus is undergoing a transformation from human to god and is thus worthy of divine couches.

adfor, adfārī, adfātus sum: to speak to, address
adnuō, adnuere, adnui, adnūtum: to nod, give assent collis, collis m.: hill dignior, ius: more worthy dilābor, dilabī, dilapsus sum: to fall down, fall apart, perish dūcō, dūcere, duxī, ductum: to lead fulgur, fulguris n.: lightning funda, ae f.: sling
glāns, glandis f.: ball of lead, bullet
Grādīvus, ī m.: Gradivus, epithet of Mars meaning “He who walks in battle”
increpō, increpere, increpuī, increpitum: to make a noise, resound intābescō, intābescere, intābuī: to melt away, dissolve nemorōsus, a, um: wooded Palātinus, a, um: of the Palatine, one of the seven hills of Rome
pulvīnar, pulvīnaris n.: cushioned seat, seat of honor

Quirīnus, ī m.: Quirinus, a god with whom the deified Romulus was identified quondam: (adv.) once, formerly reddō, reddere, reddidī, redditum: to give back, restore, return to reor, rērī, ratus sum: to calculate, judge, reckon
rēs Rōmāna, rēi Rōmānae f.: Roman state
Rhēa Silvia, Rhēae Silviae f.: Rhea Silvia, the mother of Romulus and Remus
Rōmānus, a, um: of Rome
Rōmulus, ī m.: Romulus, the first king of Rome
summa, ae f.: a summary, most important point, sum total tēmō, tēmōnis m.: beam, yoke
tenuis, e: thin, fine
tonitrus, ūs m.: thunder
valeō, valēre, valui, valitum: to be strong, be healthy verber, verberis n.: lash, whip

- 16 Coniunx Rōmulī, Hersilia, virum ut āmissum flet, cum Iūnō īrin dēscendere ad
 17 Hersiliam et referre sīc sua mandāta imperat. īris pāret, et dēlapsa per arcū pictōs

 27 nōmen pariter cum corpore mūtāvit. Hora vocātur, quae nunc dea Quirīnō iuncta 28 est.

Commentary

16 cum Iūnō īrin dēscendere: īrin is accusative singular.

18–19 ō mātrōna, dignissima fuisse ante coniunx tantī virī, nunc esse coniunx Quirīnī: Understand dignissima with both infinitive constructions.

21 Hersilia vix tollēns lūmina: lūmina means eyes here.

23 dederint mē posse vidēre: Understand dederint to mean grant here. Translate: If the fates will have granted ...

23 mē accēpisse caelum fatēbor: Hersilia means that she will be very happy, but Ovid's language also foreshadows her transformation into a star.

25–26 Crīnibus ā lūmine sīderis flagrantibus ... cessit: Crīnibus flagrantibus is an ablative absolute. After her hair bursts into flames, Hersilia rises up into the air with the star.

compellō, compellāre, compellāvī,

compellātum: to address, accost

dēcidō, dēcidere, dēcidī: to fall down, fall away

dēlabor, dēlabī, dēlapsus sum: to glide down, fall down, sink

flētus, ūs m.: tears, weeping

Hersilia, ae f.: Hersilia, wife of Romulus

Hora, ae f.: Hora, the name of deified

Hersilia

ingredior, ingredi, ingressus sum: to step in, enter, walk

Īris, Īris f.: Iris, goddess of the rainbow and messenger of the gods

obumbrō, obumbrāre, obumbrāvī, obumbrātum: to overshadow, cover

priscus, a, um: old, ancient

Rōmuleus, a, um: of Romulus

sistō, sistere, stitī: to stand, cause to stand still, stop

vireō, virēre, viruī: to be green

CUM CLAUSES

Cum clauses feature verbs in either the indicative or the subjunctive mood. When the verb is in the indicative, the cum clause is a temporal clause and cum should be translated when. When the verb is in the subjunctive, the cum clause is one of three types. In a circumstantial cum clause, cum should be translated when, and the clause describes the circumstances under which something happens rather than the time at which it happens (which would be the case with a verb in the indicative). In a causal cum clause, cum should be translated since. In a concessive cum clause, cum should be translated although. When you encounter a cum clause which features a verb in the subjunctive, you have to decide which type of clause is represented. In the sentence Cum rēs Rōmāna valeat, solve praemia quae prōmissa sunt mihi dignōque nepōtī tuō, et pōne Rōmulum in caelō, the cum clause is best interpreted as a causal clause and the cum should be translated since. In the sentence Cum mē terreās, cupiō tamen vidēre virum, the tamen indicates that the cum clause is concessive. Thus, cum should be translated although.

Roman history traditionally is divided into three main periods, and the earliest of these is a period in which Rome is ruled by seven kings. The period starts in 753 BCE when Rome is founded by Romulus, and runs until the last king is expelled in 510–509 BCE. Romulus' name simply means “man of Rome,” and the king is mythical rather than historical. According to myth, Rhea Silvia is impregnated by the god Mars and subsequently gives birth to both Romulus and his twin brother Remus. When their birth is discovered, the twins are placed into a basket and set afloat on the Tiber River. The basket washes up on a shore, and the twins are nursed by a she-wolf until they are found. Eventually, they restore their ousted grandfather to the throne of Alba Longa and set out to establish a new city. Because of rivalry between the brothers, Romulus kills Remus and becomes the first king of Rome. The deification in this story anticipates the apotheosis of Julius Caesar at the end of the Metamorphoses.

28 Cipus

(Met. 15.547–621)

When Cipus realizes that horns have grown from his head and that he stands to become king of Rome, he exiles himself from the city to avoid the office.

1 Cīpus Rōmānus cui týrannis odiōsa foret erat. Sīc nēmō stupuit magis quam Cīpus

Commentary

1 *cui týrannis odiōsus foret: foret is the same as esset, the imperfect subjunctive of esse.

3 *Quae vīdit, tetigit: The antecedent of quae is cornua.

8–9 *Quae simul haruspex Tyrrhēnus adspicit: The antecedent of quae is exta. Cipus has consulted a haruspex to determine what is indicated by his new horns.

14 *Ille pedem refert: Cipus takes a step backwards.

15 *Iustius multō: multō is an ablative of degree of difference with the comparative adverb iustius. Translate: more justly by much.

 28 Cornua in aerātīs postibus portārum insculpunt, mansūra per longum aevum. Cīpus 29 vir quem Rōmānī ament est.

Commentary

19–20 *sī Rōmam intrāverit . . . datūrum esse: This is a future more vivid condition in indirect statement after indicat.

21 *coniunctiōr mihi illō: illō is ablative of comparison after the comparative coniunctiōr. Translate: more connected to me than that man.

22 *aut finīte metum morte tyrannī fātālis: morte is an ablative of means.

26–7 *At procerēs . . . rūs magnum tibi honōrātō dant: Ovid addresses Cipus directly here, making the story more vivid for his audience. rūs refers to an estate in the country rather than the country itself.

RELATIVE CLAUSES OF CHARACTERISTIC

Relative clauses of characteristic are subjunctive clauses introduced by relative pronouns. Whereas a relative clause which contains a verb in the indicative mood offers actual information about the antecedent of the relative pronoun, a relative clauses of characteristic offers less concrete information about its antecedent. For example, in the sentence Cipus Rōmānus cui týrannis odiōsa foret erat, the relative clause cui týrannis odiōsa foret contains a verb in the imperfect subjunctive and is a relative clause of characteristic. The sentence should be translated Cipus was the type of Roman man for whom tyranny was hateful, as opposed to Cipus was a Roman man for whom tyranny was hateful. The information provided by the clause is more general than that provided by a relative clause which uses a verb in the indicative. Similarly, the sentence Cipus vir quem Rōmānī ament est should be translated Cipus is the sort of man whom the Romans love.

The story of Cipus, who is honored for refusing to become a Roman king even though he is given the opportunity, captures the Romans' negative attitude towards monarchy. Although early Roman kings such as Romulus and Numa Pompilius were regarded with reverence, in general Romans celebrated their republican government and opposed the idea of absolute rule. Julius Caesar was assassinated by men who feared his status as dictator. Thus, when establishing himself as the first emperor, Augustus was careful to construct an image of himself which did not suggest kingship.

29 Aesculapius

(Met. 15.622–744)

When a deadly plague strikes the city, the Romans invite the god of medicine to come to Rome from Epidaurus.

1 Quondam dīra luēs aurās Rōmānās vitiāverat, et corpora pallida morbō squālēbant.
2 Virī, fessī fūneribus, mortālia temptāmenta esse nihil cernunt et artēs medentium
3 nōn posse. Rōmānī sē quid luem fēcerit rogant, sed nōn sciunt quae causa fuerit vel
4 quid iuvet vel quōs consulere débeant. Auxilium caeleste petunt, et Delphōs,
5 tenentēs medium humum orbis, adeunt. Ōrāculum Phoebī petunt. Ōrant ut deus
6 mala urbis fīniat. Et locus et laurus et pharetra, quam deus ipse habet, intremiscunt.
7 Cortīna ex adytō hanc vōcem reddit, et pectora pavefacta movet: “Quod hinc
8 petitis, Rōmānī, petite nunc in aliō locō. Nec opus est Phoebō, sed Phoebeīo nātō.
9 Īte cum bonīs avibus prōlemque meam arcessite.”

Commentary

1 *Quondam dīra . . . squālebant: Ovid begins his account with a vivid description of poisoned air and pale bodies wasted by the disease. Ancient Greek medical texts discuss the importance of the quality of air for health.

2–3 *et artēs medentium nōn posse: This accusative-infinitive construction is still in indirect statement after cernunt, and posse is used here to mean to be effective.

5 *tenentēs medium humum orbis: The sanctuary of Delphi was thought to be located at the center of the earth.

6 *Et locus et laurus et pharetra, quam deus ipse habet, intremiscunt: Ovid refers to the sanctuary's statue of the god and its adornments here.

7 *Cortīna ex adytō hanc vōcem reddit: The priestess of Apollo sat on a large tripod when prophesying. The tripod stands for the priestess herself.

8 *Nec opus est Phoebō: The construction opus est takes an ablative of the thing needed.

adeō, adīre, adī, aditum: to go or come to, approach adytum, ī n.: the innermost area of a temple arcessō, arcessere, arcessīvī, arcessitum: to summon, call to a place auxilium, ī n.: help, assistance cernō, cernere, crēvī, crētum: to separate, distinguish, perceive cortīna, ae f.: cauldron, tripod
Delphī, ḍ̄rum m. pl.: Delphi, a place famous for Apollo's oracle

dīrus, a, um: horrible, dire intremisco, intremiscere: to tremble luēs, luis f.: disease, pestilence, plague
medēns, medentis m.: a physician morbus, ī m.: disease, illness
pallidus, a, um: pale pavefactus, a, um: terrified
Phoebēius, a, um: of Phoebus, of Apollo
squāleō, squālēre, squālūrī: to be stiff, be dirty temptāmentum, ī n.: a trial, attempt

10 Postquam senātus verba deī accipit, quam urbem filius Phoebī colat explōrat.
 11 Viros ad Epidauria litora mittit. Cum virī missī Epidauria litora tangunt, adeunt

Commentary

13 qui fūnera Rōmānorūm finiat: This is a relative clause of purpose, a relative clause with a subjunctive verb which also indicates why something is done. Translate: so that the god will put an end to the funerals of the Romans.

19 Exemplō deus cum voce somnōque abit: In other words, the vision of the god leaves along with his voice, and the Romans who were dreaming wake up.

21 ut indicet signīs caelestibus: signīs caelestibus is ablative of means.

22–3 Vix verbīs dictīs, deus, in formā serpentis ... movet: As the god approaches, his powerful presence causes everything to shake. signum refers to the sanctuary's statue.

25 populōs colentēs tua sacra iuvā: tua sacra is the direct object of colentēs.

INDIRECT QUESTION

Like an indirect statement, an indirect question is a representation of indirect speech; however, an indirect question is formed as a subordinate clause with a verb in the subjunctive rather than as a construction which uses an accusative and infinitive. Indirect questions are introduced by interrogative words such as quis (who), quid (what), cūr (why), ubi (where), or quando (when), for example, and they usually follow verbs of speaking, thinking, or sensing. In the sentence Rōmānī sē quid luem fēcerit rogam, sed nōn sciunt quae causa fuerit vel quid iuvet vel quōs consulere dēbeant, the clauses quid luem fēcerit, quae causa fuerit, quid iuvet, and quōs consulere dēbeant are all indirect questions. The sentence should be translated The Romans ask themselves what caused the plague, but they do not know what the cause was, what would help, or whom they ought to consult.

The panhellenic sanctuary at Epidaurus was famous as a place of healing. It was dedicated to the god Aesclepius, the Greek equivalent of Aesculapius, and the sanctuary included temples as well as a large hall for sleeping, a theater, and places for athletic activities. Those seeking cures would spend the night in the sanctuary hoping for some kind of dream-visitation from the god, an experience known as incubation. Snakes figured prominently in the cult, and several accounts exist of the god being taken from Epidaurus in the form of a snake to assist with epidemics in other places. Licks from sacred dogs living in the sanctuary also were important in the healing process. Inscriptions found at the sanctuary celebrate many miraculous cures.

30 The apotheosis of Caesar

(Met. 15.745–870)

When Julius Caesar is assassinated, Venus takes his soul in the form of a comet to join the gods in the vault of heaven.

1 Aesculāpius advena Rōmam nāvigandō aequora vēnit, sed Caesar est deus in urbe
2 suā. Quem praecipuum Marte togāque bella finīta triumphīs et rēs domī gestae in 3 stellam comantem nōn vertērunt magis quam sua prōgeniēs. Neque enim dē āctīs
4 Caesaris ullum maius opus est quam quod pater huius Augustī fuit. Domuisse
5 aequoreōs Britannōs, ēgisse navēs per septemflua flūmina Nīlī papȳriferī, meruisse
6 multōs sed ēgisse aliquōs triumphōs sunt nōn maiōra quam genuisse tantum virum.
7 Ille igitur deus faciendus erat, nē Augustus crētus e mortālī sēmine foret.

8 Cum Venus Caesarem faciendum esse deum vīdit, trīste lētum pontificī suō parārī
9 quoque vīdit. Dea metū palluit. Omnibus dīvīs dixit: “Adspice quantā mōle
10 insidiae parentur, quantāque fraude caput Caesaris petātur. Cernitis sceleratōs 11 ensēs acuī. Quōs prohibēte, precor! Repellite facinus! Nē exstinguite flammās

Commentary

2–3 *Quem praecipuum Marte togāque … prōgeniēs: The antecedent of quem is Caesar. Marte and togā are ablatives of specification after praecipuum, standing for war and peace. bella, rēs, and prōgeniēs are all subjects of vertērunt. domī is locative and should be translated at home. Ovid is saying that the fact Caesar was the father of Augustus was the primary reason for his deification.

3–4 *Neque enim dē āctīs Caesaris … fuit: ullum maius opus est, taken with neque, means there is no greater work. quod should be translated the fact that here.

4–6 *Domuisse aequoreōs Britannōs … virum: The infinitive phrases are the subjects of sunt.

7 *Ille igitur deus faciendus erat: A passive periphrastic. Translate: That man had to become (be made) a god. Ovid praises Augustus by suggesting that he could not have been born from mortal seed.

8–9 *Cum Venus Caesarem faciendum esse deum vīdit … vīdit: Ovid refers to the assassination of Julius Caesar in 44 BCE. Among many other offices he held, Julius Caesar served as pontifex maximus.

10–11 *Cernitis sceleratōs ensēs acuī: acuī is a present passive infinitive.

11 *Quōs prohibēte: The antecedent of quōs is ensēs.

acuō, acuere, acui, acūtum: to sharpen

aequoreus, a, um: surrounded by sea

Augustus, ī m.: Augustus, the first Roman emperor

Britannī, ūrum m. pl.: the Britons

Caesar, Caesaris m.: Julius Caesar, Roman general and dictator

gignō, gignere, genuī, genitum: to produce, give birth to merēō, merēre, merui, meritum: to deserve, earn mōles, mōlis f.: weight, bulk palleō, pallere, pallui: to be pale, grow pale papȳrifer, papȳrifera, papȳriferum:

papyrus-bearing

pontifex, pontificis m.: a priest

praecipuus, a, um: peculiar, excellent, distinguished stella comans, stellae comantis f.: a hairy star, a comet

toga, ae f.: toga, garment worn by Roman men

triumphus, ī m.: a triumphal procession, victory

12 Vestae caede sacerdōtis!” Anxia Venus tālia verba iēcit, et superōs mōvit, 13 quamquam superī nōn possunt rumpere ferrea dēcrēta veterum sorōrum. Nōn erat 14 spēs servandī virum.

15 Superī tamen signa haud incerta futūrī lūctūs dant. Ferunt arma crepitantia inter 16 nigrās nūbēs terribilēsque tubās cornuaque audīta in caelō praemonuisse nefās.
 17 Saepe facēs in caelō ardēre vīsae sunt. Saepe guttae cruentae inter nimbōs 18 cecidērunt. In mīlē locīs Stygius būbō tristia ūmina dedit. Ferunt canēs in forō
 19 ululāvisse et umbrās silentium errāvisse. Praemonitūs dēorum vincere īnsidiās 20 malās fataque ventūra nōn potuērunt. Gladīi in cūriam Caesaris necandī causā 21 lātī sunt.

22 Tum vērō Cytherēa pectus percussit, et vēlāre Caesarem nūbe mōlīta est. Tālibus 23 verbīs Iuppiter Venerī dixit: “Nāta, parāsne sōla movēre insuperābile fātū?
 24 Nātus tuus, Cytherēa, sua tempora quae terrae dēbuit complēvit. Tū et nātus 25 Caesaris, Augustus, faciētis ut Caesar deus in caelum accēdat et in templīs colātūr.
 26 Pāce omnibus terrīs datā Augustus animum ad cīvīlia iūra vertet; iustissimus auctor 27 lēgēs feret. Exemplō suō mōrēs reget. Intereā fac hanc animam, raptam dē corpore
 28 caesō Caesaris, stellam, ut semper dīvus Iūlius Capitolium nostrum forumque dē 29 excelsō templō prospectet.”

30 Vix pater dixerat, cum Venus in mediā sēde senatūs constitit, et, nōn passūra
 31 animam Caesaris solvī in āera, animam ēripuit. In caelestia astra tulit. Ut tulit, 32 Venus animam ignescere sēnsit. Ēmīsit sinū, et anima altius lūnā volāvit. Trahēns 33 crīnem flammiferum nunc micat stella.

Commentary

13 *quamquam superī... veterum sorōrum: The old sisters are the Fates, who determine all that will happen.

15–16 *Ferunt ... praemonuisse nefās: Ferunt here means they say and introduces indirect statement.

24–5 *Tū et nātus Caesaris ... colātūr: The ut clause follows faciētis and indicates what will be accomplished.

30–1 *nōn passūra animam Caesaris solvī in āera: passūra describes Venus and is followed by the accusative-infinitive construction.

32 *et anima altius lūnā volāvit: lūnā is an ablative of comparison after the comparative adverb altius.

GERUNDS AND GERUNDIVES

A gerund is a verbal noun which only has forms in the neuter singular. There is no nominative form for the gerund; instead, the infinitive is used as a subject. The gerundive is a verbal adjective which is equivalent to the future passive participle. Because it is an adjective, it has masculine, feminine, and neuter endings in the singular and plural. The declensions of the gerund and the gerundive for necō, nēcāre, nēcāvī, nēcātūm follow.

Gerund

Nominative		XXX		XXX
Genitive		necandī		of killing
Dative		necando		to/for killing
Accusative		necandum		killing
Ablative		necando		by, with killing

Gerundive (to be killed)

Singular			Plural
	Masculine	Feminine	Neuter	Masculine	Feminine	Neuter
Nominative	necandus	necanda	necandum	necandī	necandae	necanda
Genitive	necandī	necandae	necandī	necandōrum	necandārum	necandōrum
Dative	necando	necandae	necando	necandis	necandis	necandis
Accusative	necandum	necandam	necandum	necandōs	necandas	necanda
Ablative	necando	necandā	necando	necandis	necandis	necandis

Latin uses both gerunds and gerundives, but there is a general preference for gerundives, even when an active meaning is sought. In the sentence Aesculāpius advena Rōmam nāvigandō aequora vēnit, nāvigandō is a gerund which takes as its object aequora. The sentence should be translated Aesculapius came to Rome as a stranger by sailing the seas. In the sentence Gladīi in cūriam Caesaris necandī causā lātī sunt, necandī is a gerundive modifying Caesaris. The gerundive phrase is used here with causā (for the sake of) to indicate purpose, and the sentence should be translated Swords were carried into the curia for the sake of killing Caesar (literally for the sake of Caesar to be killed). This use of the gerundive is idiomatic and is preferred to the use of a gerund in the genitive plus an object in the accusative (... necandī Caesarem causā), which could be used to achieve the same meaning.

The account of the apotheosis of Julius Caesar is the last story in the Metamorphoses. At the end of it, Ovid celebrates Augustus and says that he too will enter the heavens and listen to the prayers of mortals. He ends his poem with a statement about his own immortality as a poet, saying that he will be carried super astra (beyond the stars). Since he has just described Venus' release of Caesar's soul into the realm of the stars, Ovid seems to suggest at the end of the epic that his own literary immortality will outlast Caesar's (and perhaps Augustus'). Indeed, the last word of the entire epic is vivam (I will live).
